

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, IN ITS PRESENT STATE;

PRACTICALLY ARRANGED AND DIGESTED

IN ALL ITS BRANCHES,

INCLUDING

The very latest Decisions of the Courts.

BY

GEORGE CRABB, ESQ.,

BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

A. MAXWELL & SON, 32, BELL YARD, LINCOLN'S INN,

Law Booksellers and Publishers;

AND HODGES & SMITH, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN.

LONDON :
W. M'DOWALL, PRINTER, PEMBERTON ROW, GOUGH SQUARE.

P R E F A C E.

THIS Work, which has employed the Author's leisure time for upwards of ten years, is distinguished from every other in several particulars.

In the first place, it is confined to the Law in its Present State. Whatever is mere matter of history has been excluded; and that which has been abolished by statute, but remains in force in respect of past transactions, has been briefly touched upon.

In the next place, it is confined to the Law as settled by the Decisions of the Courts, so far as any thing in law can be considered as settled. That which is confessedly not settled has been noticed, so as to shew the state of the Law, without entering into discussions on doubtful points, which may be found treated of at large in other treatises.

By thus confining the Work to what is wanted in ordinary practice, the Author has been enabled, without swelling it to an immoderate size, to embrace the whole of the Law of Real Property, of which particular parts only are considered in other works.

As, in a Treatise professing to give a connected view of a subject, arrangement is obviously an essential ingredient, this Work is on that score also (whether for the better or the worse) distinguishable from others. Except as regards the general outlines, in which the plan of Sir Matthew Hale (afterwards adopted by Sir William Blackstone) has been partially followed, the endeavour has been to make all the matter follow in such order as shall serve to give a clear and distinct view of the several points, and their consequent bearings on the subject in question.

The Statutes on the Transfer of Property, though passed late in the Session, have been noticed in their proper places, as also the latest Decisions, including those of the present year until the closing of the Courts.

What relates to the subject of Conveyancing, and to the Statutory Provisions concerning Real Property, is noticed by a reference to the Author's "Precedents in Conveyancing," and "Digest and Index of all the Statutes."

REAL PROPERTY.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. ALL property is distinguished into Real and Personal. Division of property.
Real property comprehends things that are immoveable, and personal property things which are moveable and go with the person.

The law of real property may be considered under these Division of the subject.
five general heads or books, namely:

BOOK I. NATURE OF REAL PROPERTY IN GENERAL.

BOOK II. THE TENURES BY WHICH THINGS REAL MAY BE HELD.

BOOK III. THE ESTATES WHICH MAY BE HAD IN THINGS REAL.

BOOK IV. THE TITLE TO THINGS REAL.

BOOK V. INJURIES TO THINGS REAL AND THEIR REME-DIES.

The book on Tenures relates to Corporeal Hereditaments only, the other books relate as well to Incorporeal as Corporeal Hereditaments.

REALTY.

§ 2. ALL real property is comprehended under the words "Lands, tenements, and hereditaments;" lands, as the subject-matter on which the Law of Real Property is founded; tenements, as that which is held; and hereditaments, as that which is inherited.

"Lands."

The word "lands" in its most universal acceptation is of very extensive import; it legally includes not only castles and houses which rest upon it as their foundation, but also all things belonging to or connected with it, as well upwards as downwards, as mines, water, air, and all other things even up to heaven, according to the maxim cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum (a).

"Tenements."

The word "tenements" taken in its most comprehensive sense is of still wider import, comprehending whatever may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether of the substantial or ideal kind, including therefore

(a) Flowd. 313; 1 Inst. 4. a.; 2 Comm. 17.

"not only all corporate inheritances which are or may be holden, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of those inheritances, or concerning, or annexed to or exercisable within the same (b);" as rents, estovers, commons or other profits whatsoever granted out of land; or uses, offices, or dignities which concern land, wherein a man hath any frank-tenement or freehold, and whereof he is seised ut de libero tenemento (b). Tenement, which is the only word used in the Statute de Donis, is, in its ordinary, but limited acceptance, applied to houses and buildings.

REALTY.

"Hereditaments" is a word of still larger extent than either of the two preceding, including not only lands and tenements, but whatever may be inherited, be it real, personal, or mixed, that is neither land nor tenement, but a mere moveable as a piece of furniture, and the like. Hereditaments are distinguished into corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal hereditaments are such as affect the senses, as lands, and houses, &c.; incorporeal hereditaments such as are not the objects of sense, but exist in the mind only.

" Hereditaments."

The nature of Real Property may be further considered under these three heads or chapters: 1. Distinction between Realty and Personalty. 2. Corporeal Hereditaments. 3. Incorporeal Hereditaments.

§ 4. Personalty as distinguished from realty is known in law by the name of chattels, which are again distinguished into real and personal. Chattels real are terms for years of lands and tenements, next presentations, mortgages, estates by statute staple, statute merchant, and elegit, &c. Chattels personal are cattle, furniture, money and the like moveables. Chattels are likewise distinguished into chattels in possession, which are in the immediate possession of the person entitled, or chattels in action, technically called choses in action, which must be recovered by suit.

5. By the common law, an estate of freehold or inheritance, not being comprehended under the word chattels, goes to the heir, but chattels on the other hand regularly go to the executor; this rule however both as to chattels real and personal admits of exceptions and modifications, when considered either as to the different kinds of representatives, as to landlord and tenant, or assignees in bankruptcy &c., and lastly as between husband and wife.

I. Chattels Real.

6. Of chattels real which commonly go to the executor the following are entitled to notice: 1. Terms; 2. Next presentations; 3. Mortgages; 4. Rents; 5. Annuities.

1. Terms.

Chattel interests in land go to the executor.

Do not go in succession.

7. All leases and terms of lands, tenements and hereditaments which give a chattel interest only, go to the executor or administrator, but he has no interest in freehold terms or leases, therefore a term for one's own life or the life of another, being a freehold, goes to the heir and not to the executor, but a term for a thousand or ever so many more years, being less than a freehold, goes to the executor, and not to the heir (a). So, if a lease for years be made to a bishop, parson or other sole corporation, and his successors, yet it will go to his executor or administrator, for a corporation sole cannot take a chattel in succession (b), for succession in a body politic is the same as inheritance of a private person (b), but it is otherwise in case of a corporation aggregate of many, as a Dean and Chapter, Mayor and Commonalty, and the like (b); so of a sole corporation by custom as the Chamberlain of London (b); so in the case of the queen (b).

(b) Fulwood's case, 4 Co. 65.

So, a limitation of a term for years to one in tail, vests the whole in the first taker, and the same shall go to his executors, and not to the heir (c). So, a grant from the Crown of "the year, day, and waste" though made to one and his heirs, yet, being but a chattel, goes to the executor (d); so, in the case of a tenancy from year to year as long as both parties please, the interest of the tenant goes to his executor or administrator (e), or to a devisee (f); but where a lease is made to several for a term of years as joint-tenants, and one dies, his interest survives, and his personal representatives take nothing (g).

8. As a rule, courts of equity follow the law in their construction of chattel interests, to which a person may be equitably entitled, but terms to attend the inheritance form an exception to this rule, being always allowed to follow the fee. See further as to trust terms, post, EQUITABLE ESTATES; also as to estates pur autre vie, post, ESTATES FOR LIFE.

Equitable interest in terms.

2. Next Presentation.

9. An advowson, of which a man is seised in fee, goes to the heir and not to the executor, but if the church becomes void in the lifetime of the patron, and he dies, the church being still void, the next presentation goes to the executor and not to the heir, being a chattel severed from the inheritance (h). So, if a person purchase the next presentation to a church, and die before it becomes void, this, as a chattel, shall go to the executor, and not to the heir (i); and it is said that the next presentation before the church

Goes to the executor.

It was also held, in some of the earlier cases, that the mortgage-money should go to the heir, if the personal assets were sufficient for the payment of the debts (s); but it is now settled by a series of decisions that the executor, and not the heir, is entitled to the money (t); and the heir or devisee of the mortgagee will be a trustee for the personal representative, and will be directed to convey to him (u); but the heir may, if he chooses, pay off the mortgage, and keep the land (x); and a mortgagee may by any declaration in his will convert the money into land for the benefit of his heir (y); and the devise of a mortgage estate, considered as irredeemable, will pass to the devisee, as land (z).

12. If a man, seised in fee, make a lease reserving rent generally, without saying to whom, it shall go to his heir and not to his executor (a); if reserved to him, his executors, and assigns, the rent shall determine at his death, because, rent being incident to the reversion, cannot go to the executors (b); yet, if the words "during the term" be added in such a lease, it has been held that these words are sufficient to carry the rent to the heir (c); but, in the report of this case (d), it is laid down, that the construction of reservations ought to be according to the reason and equity of the thing; and therefore, as, on the one hand, if a tenant in fee made a lease reserving rent to him and his executors, the rent could not go to the executors; so, on the other hand, if a lessee, for one hundred years, should make a lease for forty years, reserving rent to him and his heirs, that would go to the executor and be void for the heir; so if tenant in tail made a lease reserving rent to him and his heirs generally, yet the rent would go to the issue in tail. But where a lessee for three lives assigned his whole estate, reserving a rent to him and his executors, held, that as no reversion was left in the lessor, his executors, and not the heir, were entitled to the rent (e); so, where a man seised in fee of one acre, and possessed of another acre for term of years, made a lease, rendering one entire rent, whereby the reversion of one acre would go to the heir, and of the other to his executors, held that the rent should be apportioned between the heir and the executor (f).

13. But although rent be incident to the reversion, and shall go therewith, and be payable to the heir, yet the arrearages incurred and become payable in the lifetime of the lessor, shall go to the executor as part of his personal estate (g); therefore, if a person, seised in fee, leased for years, reserving rent payable on certain days, if he died after either of the rent-days, all the rent due at the last rent-day would go to his executor (h); but if he died before the day, then the rent, which would accrue due on that day, would go to the heir (i), or to the devisee to whom the reversion was devised (k), or to a jointress (l), or to a re-

If the lessor died on the rent-day after sunset, and before midnight, the heir, it seems, and not the executor, should have the rent, for it was held not to be due until the utmost limit of the day, which does not end until twelve o'clock, although the time for demanding it be, for conveniency, any time before the sun sets (n).

5. Annuities.

14. An annuity, so far as it charges the person only, and does not concern the land or savour of the realty, is a personal thing (o), but, being an inheritance, cannot go to the personal representative (p).

Annuity properly personal estate.

II. Chattels Personal.

15. The exceptions to the rule, that chattels go to the executor, are more numerous in the case of chattels personal than in that of chattels real, either in favour of the heir or of the freehold, as between real and personal representatives, landlord and tenant or assignees in bankruptcy &c. These exceptions may be considered under the following heads:—1. Heir-looms; 2. Fixtures; 3. Emblements; 4. Certain Animals.

When they go to the heir.

1. Heir-Looms.

16. Heir-looms are such goods and chattels as go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor or administrator of the last owner of the estate, and are said to be the best thing of every sort, as of beds, tables, pots, pans, carts, and other moveables (g). They are due by custom and not by the common law, and the heir may have an action for them and shall not sue for them in the Ecclesiastical Court; but they are not devisable (r).

There are, besides, other things in the nature of heir-looms, as monuments, coat-armour, pennons, and other ensigns of honour which belong to a man's degree or order, and are usually set up in the church; and although the freehold of the church be in the parson, yet he cannot deface or remove these things, but the heir may have an action against him for so doing (s); so, on the same principle the ornaments of the chapel of a bishop, though he is a corporation sole (t), shall nevertheless go to his successor, as an heir-loom (u); and this rule is said to apply to such things, belonging to a parsonage, as have gone from successor to successor (x); but the property in the shroud and coffin belongs to the executor or administrator, and may be laid to be theirs in an indictment for stealing them (y).

Jewels, &c.

So, although a man devise all his jewels &c. to his wife, yet his garter and collar of S. S. shall go to his heir, in the way of heir-looms (z). And it seems that on the same principle the journals of the House of Lords, delivered to a peer, should go with the title (a). So, the Court of Chancery has power to compel the delivery of chattels personal in the nature of heir-looms; and on motion the plaintiff was allowed the inspection of the articles which he claimed in a chest at the defendant's bankers, though in his answer he insisted on a lien (b).

REALTY AND PERSONALTY.

17. It is a rule that things fixed to the freehold become parcel thereof, and go to the heir, not to the executor (c); therefore, if a tenant affixed any thing, he could not on his quitting remove it (d); so goods and chattels annexed to the freehold go to the heir and not to the executor, as glass in a window, doors and locks of a house &c. (e); so pictures, glasses, &c. fixed instead of wainscoat (f).

Rule as to things fixed to the freehold.

18. This rule, though relaxed, as between the personal representatives of tenant for life or of tenant in tail and the remainderman, and still more so as between landlord and tenant, is adhered to with considerable strictness, as between the heir or devisee of tenant in fee and the executor; but even here there have been some instances of relaxation, and therefore it will be necessary to consider each of these cases in their order.

Exceptions to the rule.

19. First, as between heir and executor, a distinction has been taken between things accessory to the carrying on trade, or essential to the enjoying of the inheritance (g); therefore, in a case before Lord C. B. Comyns cited in Lawton v. Lawton (h), a cyder-mill, though affixed to the freehold, was held to go to the executor and not to the heir; but in Lawton v. Salmon, cited in Fitzherbert v. Shaw (i), which was a case of salt-pans erected by the tenant in fee, and used in the salt works, they were held to go to the heir, and not to the executor, because they were necessary to the enjoyment of the inheritance. Again, a distinction has been taken, grounded on the custom of the country (k); and also whether they are fixtures set up merely for domestic convenience (l), so determined, says the report, contrary to Herlakenden's case (m); and so in Beck v. Rebow (n), hangings and looking-glasses, being mere matters of ornament, were taken not to be part of the house or freehold; and a similar decision was come to in Harvey v. Harvey (o), as to hangings, tapestry, and iron backs to chimneys; but in Winn v. Ingilby (p), set pots, stoves, grates, coppers, and other things which could not be removed without doing injury to the freehold, were held to go to the heir, and not to the executor.

Devisee and executor.

20. A devisee differs from an heir no further than as his claims may be affected by the terms of the will, and the presumed intention of the testator; therefore, where the devise was of a copyhold estate, consisting, inter alia, of a brewhouse and malthouse, with the plant and utensils, held that the plant passed with the brewhouse, as the latter would have been of no use without it (q); so, by a devise of a West India plantation, the stock, implements, utensils &c. will pass (r).

Executors of tenant for life
&c. and re-mainderman.

21. As between the executors of tenant for life and remainderman, it has been held in two cases, that an engine set up for the benefit of a colliery and the increase of trade, should go to the executor, and not to the remainderman (s).

Landlord and tenant.

22. As between landlord and tenant the rule has been relaxed very considerably in favour of the latter; a tenant may therefore now remove any buildings which have been erected by himself for the purposes of trade (t), particularly if erected upon blocks, and not fixed in or to the ground (u), provided he removes them before the expiration of the term (x); or during such further period of possession by the tenant, as he holds under a right to consider himself as tenant (y); but in Elwes v. Maw (z), it was held that the exception in favour of the tenant, with regard to trade fixtures, did not extend to buildings erected for the purposes of agriculture; therefore, where a tenant in agriculture erected a beast-house and other buildings which were let into the ground, held, that he could not remove the same, though during his term, and he left the premises in the same state as when he entered. But even agricultural buildings may be so erected as to fall within the exception; therefore, where a tenant removed the soil of the demised land, and placed therein stone staddles, in some places with a brick foundation, and erected upon the staddles a thatched wooden barn, which was kept in its place upon the staddles by the pressure of the superincumbent weight alone, held, that he might remove the woodwork and thatch, but not the foundation (a).

23. The word "fixtures" does not necessarily imply things fixed to the freehold (b); therefore, window sashes neither hung nor beaded into the frames, but merely fastened by laths nailed across the frames, have been held not to be fixed to the freehold (c); so, a pump being an article of domestic use, erected so as to be removable without injury to the freehold (d); so, a cornice fixed up by screws (e); so an ornamental chimney-piece (f); sed secus if the chimney-piece be not ornamental, and also if the pillars of brick and mortar be built on a dairy floor, although not let into the ground (f); and if the erection be let into the ground, or cemented, or otherwise united to any erection that is let into the ground, it cannot afterwards be removed, although it be merely for ornament; therefore a conservatory which was attached to a dwelling-house by means of cantilevers let into the wall, was held to be so annexed to the freehold, that the removal of it was considered waste (g). And a question, whether a fixture can be removed by a tenant without substantial injury to the freehold, is proper for a jury, upon an issue whether it is removable by law (h).

As between mortgagor and mortgagee.

24. The principle that things fixed to the freehold cannot be removed but must go therewith has been adhered to in other cases, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, in cases of distress or execution, or bankruptcy, as also on the conveyance of the freehold. As between a mortgagor and mortgagee, the former is to many intents considered as tenant to the latter, or may be so treated by him at his election (i); therefore, where a mortgagor became bankrupt, held, that his assigns could not remove the fixtures from the premises, whereby they should become dilapidated (k).

In cases of distress.

Things such as coppers, grates, &c., which, under circumstances, may be removable by a tenant, are, nevertheless, not to be distrained (l); but it is doubtful whether machinery, fixed by bolts to a floor, is distrainable (m), and in an early case it was decided that although a stone was severed from a mill for the purpose of being picked, yet it remained notwithstanding parcel of the mill, and could not be distrained (n), sed secus if it were another stone lying loosely by (n). Things wrongfully severed by a tenant, as machinery belonging to a mill, cannot be taken in execution under a fi. fa. (o); and before the late Acts making all real property liable to the debts of the owner, particularly the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (p), a dyer's vat, fastened to the wall of the house, could not be taken in execution under a fi. fa. (q), so set pots, ovens, and ranges belonging to the plaintiff's freehold, for as these would go to the heir and not to the executor, they were not liable as goods and chattels to be taken in execution (r); and so in Steward v. Lombe (s), where a close on which a windmill was erected, was mortgaged for a term of years, and in the same deed there was a conveyance of the mill to the mortgagee in fee, held, that the mill, being incident to the land, could not be taken in execution. The rule has also been applied to cases of bankruptcy, where the question is, what is in the order and disposition of a bankrupt so as to pass to his assignees, it being held that as goods and chattels are the only property mentioned in the statute, lands and fixtures are not affected thereby (t); therefore, stills and other things affixed to the freehold, are not within the order and disposition of the bankrupt (u); so, stoves, grates, and other things legally fixed to the premises, though removable by the tenant, are nevertheless held to be not in the order and disposition of a bankrupt within the statute (x); so, shares in a bridge company have been held not to pass to the assignees (y), sed secus as to such shares where by the Act they are declared to be personalty (z).

On this same principle, that whatever is once annexed to the freehold cannot be severed, fixtures will pass in a conveyance of the freehold; therefore where the owner of a freehold house, in which there were various fixtures, sold it by auction, and no mention was made of the fixtures, held, that they passed with the conveyance of the house (a); and by a mortgage of a mill, the stones, tackling, and implements necessary for the working of the mill pass to the mortgagee (b); so, where a lessee for years mortgaged his estate and interest in the premises, held that the mortgagee might declare, as reversioner, against the assignee of the tenant for the removal of the fixtures (c); but in Archer v. Bennett (d), where a man was seised of a close, on one part whereof was a house, and on another part thereof was a kiln, and also two mills adjoining to the close, and he sold the mills cum pertinentiis, held that the kiln and the part of the close whereon it stood, did not pass; for, by the grant of a messuage or land cum pertinentiis, any other land or thing will not pass; but it seems that it would have been otherwise, if it had been shewn that the kiln was necessary for the use of the mills.

25. All trees are parcel of the inheritance and go to the heir; if, therefore, a man convey his lands by bargain and sale, and all trees by express words, and the lands do not pass for want of inrolment or otherwise, the trees do not pass (e); and if a man lease lands for life or years with all trees, the trees pass only, as they are annexed to the land, and the lessee shall not cut them (f); but, if a man grants all his trees, they are absolutely seised in law and passed away from the grantor and his heirs, and being vested as chattels in the grantee, pass to his executors (g); yet, though the soil itself does not pass, a sufficient nutriment out of the earth for the vegetation of the trees is granted (h); so, if a man sells his land reserving the timber trees, they remain as a chattel in him, distinct from the soil, and shall go to his executors (i), but if the feoffee afterwards buy the trees, they are re-annexed to the inheritance (k); yet if tenant in fee-simple lease the land for years, excepting the trees, and afterwards grants the trees to the lessee, they are not re-annexed to the inheritance, but remain absolutely in the lessee, and will go to his executors (l); so, if tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, with power to cut trees, and to make leases for three lives, &c., leases for three lives, except the trees, and dies before cutting, the trees are re-annexed and his executor cannot cut them (l). So, if tenant in tail sells the trees to another, they go to the executors of the vendee (m); but if they are not felled in the lifetime of the tenant in tail, they go to his issue, and neither the vendee nor his executor can have them (n).

What timber trees or otherwise.

26. By the term "timber" is meant properly such trees only as are fit to be used in building, as oak, ash, and elm; but some trees may, by the custom of the country, be reckoned timber which are not properly so, as birch, beech, &c. (o); so, walnut trees, being of considerable value, may be estimated as timber (o); therefore, the birch, from the use made of it in Yorkshire for cottages, sheep-houses, and such other mean buildings, has been held to be timber (p), and therefore it belonged to the inheritance and could not be cut by tenant for life (p); so, willows in Hampshire (q); and although it has been said that pollards are not timber (r), yet the better opinion appears to be, that, if the bodies of them be sound and good, they shall be deemed timber (s), sed secus if they are not sound, for then they are good for nothing but fuel (t); the same may be said of dotards, if they have any timber in them (u).

windfalls.

27. The timber while standing is part of the inheritance, but whenever it is severed, either by the act of God, as by a tempest, or by a trespasser, or by wrong, it belongs to him who has the first estate of inheritance, whether in fee or in tail, who may bring trover for it; and this was so decreed upon occasion of the great windfall of timber on the Cavendish estate, per Lord C. King (x); and where there is an infant entitled to the contingent inheritance, the Court of Chancery will see that the money arising from the sale of such windfalls shall be secured for his benefit (y).

28. As the trees, unless severed, belong to the heir (z), so does the fruit which they bear, as apples, pears, &c., belong to the heir (a); so, grass growing, though fit to be mowed down for hay, shall go with the land (a); so, roots of all kinds, such as parsnips, turnips, &c., belong to the heir, for these cannot be come at without digging up the soil, which must necessarily be a spoil and injury to the inheritance (b). But corn, though growing, and every thing else which is produced annually by labour and cultivation, shall go to the executor and not to the heir, as hops, saffron, hemp, &c. (c); therefore, if lessee for life of a hop-ground dies in August before severance, the executor may maintain trover for them against the remainderman (d). These annual fruits of the earth are in law termed emblems, of which see further, post, ESTATES. As to contracts under the Statute of Frauds, respecting land and chattels, see Dig. P. II. tit. 4. Certain Animals.

§ 30. The distinction between real and personal property as to their liability to the debts of the owner is of less importance now than formerly (m), yet it is entitled to consideration in these respects; 1. As they are assets for the payment of debts; 2. As they form a fund for the payment of debts.

I. Assets for the Payment of Debts.

31. Assets, from the French assez, sufficient, is a term in Definition. law applied to the property of a deceased person, so far as it is sufficient for or applicable to any given purpose, as formerly, to make warranty a bar to an estate tail (n), or more particularly assets for the payment of debts. Assets are distinguished into personal or real.

Personal assets, or assets entre mains, as they used to be called (o), are what comes into the hands of the executor or administrator to be applied for the payment of debts. Personal assets.

Real assets, or assets per descent, as they are commonly called, are what descend to the heir, and are in like manner applicable for the payment of debts. What has been deemed personal assets need not here to be particularised further than is necessary to distinguish them from real Real assets.

assets. As to the distinction between legal and equitable assets, see infra, § 41.

What liable to debts.

32. At common law personal property has in all cases been deemed assets in the hands of the executor, but it was otherwise with real property, which in the hands of the heir was deemed assets only in certain cases, as where the ancestor bound himself and his heirs in an obligation, there the obligee might have an action against the heir, and recover to the value of the assets descended (p), but the heir must have been expressly named, otherwise he was not chargeable (q); so, if the heir, before action brought, aliened the land, the obligee was without remedy at law, although it was otherwise in equity (r); but the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14, amended and extended by 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 47, has made not only the heir but also the devisee answerable for debts upon specialty; and an heir of an heir is liable (s); so, also, as it seems, an executor or administrator of an heir (t); so, in debt against the heir upon an obligation made by his ancestor, the plaintiff by the common law should have all the land which descended to the heir in execution against him, although in that case only was land liable to the execution of the debt of a common person at common law; and the reason assigned for this exception is, that the law gave an action of debt against the heir, but if the plaintiff should not have execution of the lands against the heir, he could have no fruit of his action (u).

Land made liable by statute.

By the 13 E. 1, c. 18, land was first subjected to the execution of a judgment or recognisance by means of the writ of elegit which gave a moiety of the land, and has now, by the 1 & 2 V. c. 110 (x), been extended to the whole of the land. By the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 104, lands copyhold, as well as freehold, are made assets for the payment of debts

REALTY AND PERSONALTY.

33. As to what things are real assets. Lands are first entitled to notice; they must be freehold, and descend to the heir in fee-simple, not lands in fee tail(y); so, they must be lands taken by descent, and not by purchase(z); but it was decided before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 106, altering the law of purchase and descent, that a man could not by any form of conveyance whatever raise a fee-simple to his own right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a purchase, so as to prevent the reversion from being assets(a); so, lands in ancient demesne shall be assets(b); so, lands in gavelkind(c); so lands descending to an heir, after an intermediate descent(d); so, lands descended on the part of the mother, as well as land on the part of the father(e); so, where there is a trust in fee, it is made assets by descent by the Statute of Frauds(f).

An advowson appendant to a manor is unquestionably assets, "because the manor itself being assets, what is appendant must be assets likewise(g);" and it seems to be now settled after some discussion that an advowson in fee in gross is also assets(h). Reversion.

On an estate

tail.

35. A reversion in fee, expectant upon a term for years, is held both at law and in equity to be present assets; so that the heir cannot plead riens per descent in delay of execution of the rent and reversion, though the plaintiff cannot have the benefit of the reversion until the lease be determined (k), and the possession of the tenant becomes that of the heir on the death of the ancestor and makes an actual freehold in him, so that by such seisin his heir becomes liable to a bond debt incurred by him in respect of lands descended (l); so, a reversion expectant upon an estate for life is assets (m), but a reversion in fee expectant upon an estate tail is not assets, because it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to bar it at his pleasure (n), but after the tail is spent it is assets (n), and such a reversion is assets for the debt of the first person who was in possession, and who created the reversion (o); it is however not settled whether it be assets for the debt of any intermediate taker. In Smith v. Parker (p) it was decided that such a reversion is assets, but the correctness of this decision has been questioned in Tweddale v. Coventry (q), and Doe v. Hutton (r).

the creditor could not compel the heir to sell the reversion, but must wait until it fell. See, however, Tyndale v. Warre, Jacob, 212.

by specialty (s). On the other hand, a like estate to executors and administrators is personal assets (t).

REALTY AND PERSONALTY.

37. Personal assets in any part of the world are assets in every part of the world (u); so, if there be lands in different counties, they shall be equally assets by descent (v). In Noell v. Robinson (x), it was held, that a thing, although an inheritance, being in a foreign country, was nevertheless a chattel; but in Gardiner v. Fell (y), it was referred to the Master to inquire what interest the testator had in lands situated in a foreign country, whether personal or real. By the 5 Geo. 2, c. 7, houses and lands, and other hereditaments situate in any British plantation in America, shall be deemed assets for the payment of debts; and by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 33, a similar provision is made in respect to real property belonging to all persons, not Mahomedans or Gentooes, situated in India.

38. To constitute an inheritance assets, it must be something certain, as lands, rents, commons, and the like (z); therefore, a rent seck, which descended to the heir, and for which he had no remedy, was not assets until he had gained seisin (a). So, an annuity is not assets, for it is only a chose in action (b); so, generally, a right without any estate in possession, reversion and remainder, is not assets until it be recovered, and reduced into possession (c). A power of appointment, however, to raise a sum of money is assets for creditors (d); but there is this distinction between a power and absolute property (e), that, unless the power be executed, no creditor can be entitled to the money; and it is said, in that case, "farther than supplying a defect in the execution of a power, the Court has never gone" in favour of creditors (f).

Equity of redemption &c.

39. An equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee is assets in equity, though not at law (g); and an equity of redemption of a mortgage for years of an estate in fee is assets to pay debts by simple contract (h); so, a debt by a decree in equity, though but a personal demand, will bind the heir or devisee having assets (i); on the other hand, if an executor, in right of his testator, recover damages for any breach of covenant or contract, although it sounds in the realty as for not assuring lands, &c., yet, if it be broken in the testator's lifetime, it shall be assets in the hands of the executor (k).

Chattels real.

40. Chattels real are regularly personal assets; so a leasehold estate for years in Ireland is personal assets in England, and may be sold here by the executor (l); but as to terms for years, it has been decided in more than one case, that such a term being a trust-term is not assets in equity (m); and the distinction taken is, that a term vested in trustees is not assets to pay debts; otherwise, if the term be in the party himself, and the inheritance in trustees (n); although a dictum to the contrary of this distinction is reported in Ratcliff v. Grave (o); but in the S. C., 1 Vern. 196, no mention is made of this point.

II. Fund for the Payment of Debts.

41. Under this head may be considered, 1. The distinction between legal and equitable assets; 2. How far personalty is the fund primarily liable; 3. The order in which real property is applicable for the payment of debts; 4. Marshalling assets.

1. Distinction between Legal and Equitable Assets.

42. Assets which are liable to debts and legacies by the course of law are called legal assets, but such as are liable only by the help of a court of equity are called equitable assets. Administration of assets in course of law.

Legal assets are administered according to the rules of priority which have obtained for the payment of debts; as, first, Crown debts; next, debts which, by particular statutes, are to be preferred before others, as, money owing for the postage of letters under the Postage Acts, and money to be received by the overseers of the poor under the 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, or by the officer of Friendly Societies, under the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 40 (p). After these follow debts of record, as judgments [entered according to 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11 (q),] recognisances, then debts on special contract, as for rent, or on mortgages, bonds, covenants, and other like specialties; and lastly, debts on simple contract. See further on this subject, Bac. Abr. Executors and Administrators (H.); 2 Wms. Exec. 1297 et seq.; Ram on Assets, 353 et seq.

In a court of equity all debts are equal, whether by judgment, bond, or simple contract, and equitable assets will be applied in satisfaction of the creditors pari passu (r); but when a court of equity administers legal assets, it does so Administration of assets in equity.

in the due course of administration, allowing the different creditors to enjoy the right of priority they are entitled to at law (s).

What legal and what equitable assets.

As to what has been deemed equitable assets in distinction from legal assets depends, as it appears, either upon the intention of the testator, or upon the nature of his interest in the property (t). Upon the principle of law, that whatever came to the hands of a person in the character of executor, or by reason of his executorship, should be assets in his hands (u), the generality of the old cases determined that money arising by sale of lands devised to, or subjected to the power of, executors to sell for the payment of debts and legacies, should be legal assets in their hands, although they could not be charged with the value of the lands before sale (x). In some, however, of the old cases, where a party was supposed to take in the double capacity of trustee and executor, the assets were held to be equitable assets (y), and that too, though the devise were not to the executor expressly upon trust or as a trustee, provided there be enough in the will to convert the executor into a trustee, as if the devise be to him and his heirs (z).

Charge of debts generally.

In Freemoult v. Dedire (a), it was holden, that if an estate descended to the heir, charged with debts, it was legal assets; but this decision has been expressly overruled

43. Where the interest of the party is purely equitable, it has been held that the assets should be deemed equitable, unless it came within the Statute of Fraudulent Devises (h), therefore where a mere trust estate descended upon an heir, it would be considered as legal and not equitable, because the statute gave the specialty creditor his remedy at law against the heir; as if there was a mortgage for years, leaving the reversion in fee in the mortgagor, that would be legal assets, because the bond creditor might have judgment against the heir of the obligor, and a cesset executio till the reversion came into possession, sed secus where it was a mortgage of the whole inheritance, because, in that case, the creditor could have no remedy at law, and if he brought an action against the heir the latter might plead riens per descent (i). In support of this decision, so far as regards a chattel mortgage, it has been held that chattels, whether real or personal, mortgaged or pledged by the testator, and redeemed by the executor, should be assets at law in the hands of the executor, for so much as they were worth beyond the sum paid for their redemption (k); it has, however, been held in other cases, that the equity of redemption of a term for years is equitable and not legal assets (l); and it is also said in Wentworth's Office of an Executor, that where the redemption of the executor is after the day of payment, equity only and not law can make any part of the value assets in his hands; these conflicting decisions may therefore be reconciled, if in the cases first cited the testator did not survive the day of redemption (m). As to mortgages in fee a distinction is taken in Sharpe v. Scarborough (Earl) (n), between bond creditors and judgment creditors, the equity of redemption being in the debtor in the former case, but in the latter case the judgment creditor has the right to redeem, and therefore the equity of redemption is in that case not equitable but legal assets.

2. How far the Personal Estate is the Primary Fund.

44. As a rule the personal estate is the primary fund, which must be resorted to for the payment of debts of every description; but to this rule there are several exceptions—in the case of bonds, and other specialties generally, in the case of mortgages, and in the case of devises.

In the case of bonds, &c.

45. As regards debts by bond and other specialties generally, where the ancestor has bound himself and his heirs, the creditor may in that case sue either the heir or the executor at his election (o); and it is no plea in an action against the heir that the executor or administrator has assets (p); so, the creditor may sue the same person being both heir and executor (q); but if the heir or executor pay the whole or part, and afterwards the other be sued, there shall be relief in audita querela (q); so, if the heir pay his ancestor's debts to the value of the land descended, he shall hold the land discharged from the other debts of the ancestor (r); but he cannot claim to retain a certain sum, for money laid out in repairing the tenements descended (s); so, a man may make an equitable as well as a legal charge on his estate, and equity will maintain it against his heir (t); so, where the heir, being likewise administrator, and having real assets per descent, discharged a bond debt, in which he was bound, which he insisted was out of the personal estate, the Court of Chancery would not admit of this construction, to the defeating of the simple contract creditors (u). On the other hand, if an heir discharges the bond debt of his ancestor, and the executor has assets, he shall reimburse the heir thereout (x); and this extends not only to the hæres natus or heir-at-law, but also to the hæres factus or the devisee (y).

PERSONALTY.

46. As a rule, if a man mortgages lands, and covenants to pay the money, and dies, the personal estate of the mortgagor shall, in favour of the heir, be applied to exonerate the mortgage (z), although the personal estate has been devised (a); but such exoneration will not be allowed to the prejudice of any creditor (b), or any legatee, except a residuary legatee (c).

Covenant to charge land.

47. Every loan creates a debt from the borrower, whether there be a bond or covenant for payment, or not (d), but in all these cases, the debt being considered as the personal debt of the borrower, the charge on the real estate is merely collateral; on the other hand, where the charge is on the real estate principally, although there be a personal collateral security, the rule is otherwise, therefore a covenant in a settlement to charge land for the payment of portions, or a jointure and the like, although such a covenant creates a debt, yet it is not a personal debt, being an auxiliary security only, and the land the principal security (e).

* Where there is an original debt.

48. The land is also not exonerated unless the debt be the original debt of the party, therefore where a grandfather mortgages, and the lands descend to his son, and his son dies, having a personal estate and a son, the son's personal estate shall not go in aid of the mortgage (f); and the like, if a man buys an estate subject to a mortgage, the land remains the proper fund for the discharge thereof (f), although there is a covenant to pay the mortgage-money (g).

Wms. 664, n.: Tankerville v. Fawcett, sup. But on this point see Barham v. Tharnet (Earl), 3 M. & K. 607. A party may, however, by an act of his own, which unequivocally denotes his in-earlier cases, not exempt from the payment of debts and legacies by anything short of express words (h). This strict rule was, however, departed from, and then it was held, that the want of such words might be supplied by "plain implication" or "manifest intention," or, as it has been more expressly said, "irresistible conclusion," or, as it was afterwards modified, "by such a conclusion as would satisfy a judge." - | | |

|-----------------------------|---|
| Estates devised. | 1. The real estate specifically devised for the payment of debts (y). |
| Estates descended. | 2. Estates descended (z). |
| Estates subject to charges. | 3. Real estate specifically devised, subject to a general charge of debts (a). |
| Advowsons descended. | 4. An advowson in fee descended before freehold estates in fee, and leasehold estates pur autre vie devised. |
| Estates in trust. | 5. Estates devised in trust to be sold for the payment of debts, then estates specifically devised and charged with debts, and lastly the estate descended (b). |
| Paying off mortgage. | 6. A descended estate was held liable to pay off the mortgage, with which a devised estate was charged (c). |

4. Marshalling Assets.

51. Marshalling assets properly includes what has been stated with regard to the order of their application (d); but the term is more particularly applied to those cases where one claimant has two funds to resort to, and another claimant has only one, in which cases a court of equity exercises its jurisdiction, in so applying the funds that all the claimants may be satisfied out of the assets as far as they will go (e); as if there is a debt owing to the queen, equity will order it to be paid out of the real estate, that other creditors may have satisfaction of their debts out of the personal assets (f). The court interposes in two ways, either by turning the person, who has the double security, upon that fund, which is not liable to the other claimants' demand, so as to leave the other fund open (g); or, if satisfaction has already been taken out of this fund by the party having the double security, then by decreeing the other party to stand in his place, and draw from the remaining fund as much as has been taken from the first mentioned, therefore where a mortgagor mortgages two estates to one person, and afterwards one only of the estates to a second mortgagee, who had no notice of the first, the Court, in order to relieve the second mortgagee, have directed the first to take his satisfaction out of that estate which is not in mortgage to the second mortgagee (h); so, where executors have paid specialty creditors secured on the real estate out of the personalty, the simple contract creditors have been decreed to have their debts satisfied out of the land (i).

Where a claimant has two funds.

52. But this marshalling must properly be as between the real and personal assets of the deceased, and it has been said that the court has no jurisdiction to marshal the assets of a person alive (k); yet it seems, that although the term "marshal" is technically applied only to assets of a deceased person, the principle may, in certain cases, be applied to transactions inter vivos (l).

contract.

So, the court cannot extend this relief to creditors further than the nature of the contract will support (m), if, therefore, the contract by specialty be such as not to affect the real estate, as a bond not mentioning heir, there is no marshalling, as there are not two funds, and therefore no one is disappointed by the option of the other (n).

In whose favour.

53. Marshalling assets is admitted in favour of creditors, in favour of legatees, and in favour of the widow's paraphernalia.

Marshalling allowed in favour of creditors.

54. By the common law the simple contract debts of a deceased person were not payable out of his real estate, unless, by his will or otherwise, he made it a fund for the payment of his debts; but it was otherwise with the creditors by specialty, where the heirs were bound. The 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 104, which subjects all real property to the payment of simple contract debts, is confined to such as have died since 29 Aug. 1833, and the 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 47 (o), which prevents a testator from defeating the claims of his specialty creditors, leaves all devises for the payment of debts as they were before, so that the doctrine of marshalling assets in favour of creditors remains in full force; accordingly, if there are creditors by specialty, and also creditors by simple contract, and the specialty creditors, instead of resorting to the real assets (which independently of the act the latter cannot reach), proceed against the personal estate, the court will then marshal the assets by permitting the simple contract creditors to stand in the place of the specialty creditors against the real assets, so far as the latter have exhausted the personal estate (p); and this applies to an estate devised, as well as to an estate descended (q); so, to copyhold as well as freehold estates (r); so, creditors by specialty, although volunteers, have been allowed, as against devisees, to stand in the place of mortgagees, who have exhausted the fund provided by the testator for the payment of debts (s); so, in case of bankruptcy, it has been held that the principle of marshalling assets was applicable (t); so, if the vendor of an estate, the contract for which was not completed in the lifetime of the testator, who was the purchaser, is afterwards paid his purchase-money out of the personal assets, the simple contract creditors of the testator shall stand in the place of the vendor, with respect to his lien on the estate sold, against the devisee of that estate (u), although in Coppin v. Coppin (x) it was holden that legatees could not stand in the place of the vendor with respect to his equitable lien, and in Pollexfen v. Moore (y) it was said, in general terms, that this equity did not extend to third persons, being confined to the vendor and vendee; but on this dictum of Lord Hardwicke see *Austen v. equity as creditors, but nevertheless, in the case of assets descended, legatees will be permitted to stand in the place of specialty creditors, who have chosen to resort to the personal estate (d).” On the other hand, where the estate does not descend, but is devised, whether to a stranger or to the heir taking as a devisee, and the question is between the legatee and devisee, the assets are not marshalled in favour of legatees, whether general (e) or specific legatees (f).

Creditor's lien.

56. A distinction is also to be taken where a creditor has a lien on the real estate, for if it be a specific lien, as a mortgage, assets will be marshalled in favour of legatees, as well where the estate is devised, as where it descends, therefore if the mortgagee exhaust the personal assets, a pecuniary legatee shall stand in the place of the mortgagee upon the devised estate (g). But if it be an equitable lien, such as a vendor has on the purchased estate for the purchase-money unpaid, it is now settled, after much discussion, that where the purchased estate has descended, pecuniary legatees have a right to stand in the place of the vendor (h). Where the purchased estate is devised, it is clearly settled, that a pecuniary legatee shall not stand in the place of the vendor upon the devised estate (i).

In some other cases it has been held, that assets shall be marshalled in favour of legatees, as where the real estate is subjected by the testator to the payment of all his debts, the legatees are allowed to stand in the place of the specialty or simple contract debtor, to the amount of the personalty exhausted by the debts, and to receive their legacies out of the estate devised (k). So, where some legacies are charged on the real estate, and others not, the assets will be marshalled in favour of the legatees whose legacies are not so charged (l).

58. A legacy given to charitable uses is void by the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, if made payable out of real estate (m), or out of the produce of the sale which the testator has directed to be made of the real estate (n); so, where the legacy is bequeathed out of personalty, and out of the real estate, as an auxiliary fund, it is so far void as it is given out of the realty (o). Formerly, a distinction was taken between a particular legacy and a residuary gift, and assets were marshalled in favour of the former (p); but by a series of cases, it is now settled that there can be no marshalling assets in favour of a charitable bequest, as this would be an evasion of the statute (q).

or directed to be done, ought to be done, and what ought to be done, shall be considered as really done^(u). According to this rule, therefore, it is that money stipulated to be converted into land, shall be considered as land; and on the other hand, land stipulated to be converted into money is considered as money. This subject, therefore, branches itself into two heads, conversion of money into land, and land into money, which, although having many points in common, cannot be set forth clearly but by considering them distinctly; to which may be added, as a third head, conversion either way, in cases of infants, lunatics, and partners.

I. Conversion of Money into Land.

This is to be considered, 1. As to how the conversion is effected, and when deemed complete; 2. Effect of the conversion; 3. Right of election.

(u) 1 Bl. 129: Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. jun. 183.

REALTY AND PERSONALTY.*1. *How the Conversion is effected.

Effected in various ways.

When complete or otherwise.

In the case of a contract.

In the case of a will.

Not necessary for money to be actually laid out.

61. Money may be converted into land in different ways, declaring the intention of the parties, as by way of contract (x), by marriage articles (y), and by will (z). Where it is by contract or by a settlement, it must, in order to be complete, be a contract which equity will enforce; therefore, if the terms of the contract cannot be ascertained (a), or there have been fraud (b), or, if there be an option left in either of the parties to complete or recede from the agreement at his discretion, in either of these cases the property will remain unaltered, as if no stipulation had been made (c); but in respect of an option, it is to be observed, that if trustees in a settlement are directed to lay out money in land, upon the request of the parties, this latter part of the provision does not make it optional in them to lay it out or not, in the event of no request being made (d). In the case of a will, that being ambulatory, the conversion is not complete until the testator's death, and until then the money will be deemed personalty, notwithstanding a devise to lay it out in land (e). So, where it is by will, the will must decisively fix upon the money the quality of land (f); and where it is a deed, the deed must do the same (f).

Where the conversion is in other respects complete, it is immaterial whether the money be actually laid out or not (g), unless when the money is in the hands of the person who would have been entitled to the land (h), or the parties died before the expiration of the time, when, according to the covenant, the money ought to have been invested (i).

So, it is immaterial if the money remain in the hands of the stipulator (k); or if, instead of being laid out, it be put out to mortgage (l). So, where the money is in the hands of trustees for the purpose of being laid out (m), and so where the stipulation is, that the money should be laid out with the consent of the husband and the wife; yet, if one die before consent given, the money will still be bound by the stipulation (n). So, where there is a covenant to lay out money in land, it makes no difference that the covenant is a voluntary one (o).

2. Effect of the Conversion.

62. As a rule, money stipulated to be converted into land, becomes clothed with all the properties of land, but this rule is subject to distinctions arising from different circumstances, particularly whether the conversion has been complete or not, and the like.

General rule.

One of the principal consequences of money being thus converted, is, that it will descend to the heir of the owner, instead of going as it otherwise would to the personal representatives (p). The exceptions to this rule are where the contract was such as could not be enforced in equity (q), or the parties have died before the time for completing the conversion (r); but it is necessary, where money is agreed or directed to be laid out in land, that the deed or will should decisively and definitely fix upon the money the quality of land, therefore, where a testator directed money to be laid out in freehold or leasehold land, and the money was not laid out, it was held that the Crown, on failure of heirs, had no equity against the next of kin to have it laid out in real estate in order to claim it by escheat (s).

In case of purchase.

63. If the owner of money, directed to be laid out in land, die before the proper conveyances are perfected, the contract must notwithstanding be completed (t). So, money stipulated to be laid out in land was not deemed personal assets for the payment of debts before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 104 (u). So, if money thus circumstanced happen to be invested in mortgage, and the mortgagee die, and the money be repaid, it must be paid to the heir and not to the executors of the mortgagee (u). So, too, a husband will be tenant by the curtesy of money agreed to be invested in land, and therefore entitled to receive the dividends or interest during his life (x), but a woman is not in the like case entitled to dower (x).

devise.

64. Money articted to be laid out in land will pass in a devise under the general words, "lands, tenements, and hereditaments (y);" and although a fine could not have been levied if money were so circumstanced, yet, where a feme covert entitled to such money came into court, and was separately examined, analogous to the form of a fine at law, the court would decree it to her (z).

3. Right of Election.

65. Where money is directed to be laid out in land, of which a person would be complete owner, if the investment were made, the court will in general allow the party to take the money instead of the land, provided he express an unequivocal intention so to do (a); and it seems that slight circumstances are sufficient to indicate such intention, and therefore bequeathing it by a will calculated to pass personal property only, was held to be sufficient indication (b), or describing it as "so much money directed to be laid out in land (c)," or calling in the money and placing it out on other securities, which would carry it to the executors (d), or giving the trustees a discharge for the money as "so much money (e);" but a parol declaration has been deemed not sufficient evidence of such election (f).

By person who is complete owner.

66. An infant is incapable of electing (g); therefore, if an infant became so entitled, and died an infant, the money would, as land, descend to his heir, and not pass under a bequest of personalty in his will, (which he was capable of making before the late Wills Act, 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 26). A feme covert before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 74, abolishing Fines and Recoveries, could not obtain money, articted to be laid out in land, in any other manner than by consenting in open court to take it as personal property (h).

immediate remainder to himself in fee), the court would let him take the money, if he should so elect; but otherwise, if a recovery were necessary, as in the case of tenant in tail, with remainder over (i). By the first of these statutes, the court was authorised to order such money to be paid to the person who, as tenant in tail, could have barred the remainder by a recovery. As to the provisions in the last of these acts, see Prec. in Conv., Append. No. X., 3rd ed.; and Dig. P. II. tit. FINES AND RECOVERIES. As to the conversion of money in cases of infancy, see post, § 78.

II. Conversion of Land into Money.

68. The conversion of land into money may also be considered under the same three heads as before mentioned (k).

1. How effected.

Effected by deed.

By contract.

Trust by will.
Partial conversion.

Conversion
"out and out."

Devise to executors.

69. This conversion is effected in three ways: First, by deed, as where a person conveys his lands to trustees for the payment of his debts, or otherwise (l); Secondly, by contract, as where a vendor contracts to sell his estate; in which case, although the vendor dies before the conveyance, the property will be deemed converted from the time of the contract (m); Thirdly, a trust to sell real estate may be created by will, and may cause a conversion, either for a particular purpose only, as to pay debts or legacies, or both (n); and sometimes the trust is to sell for general purposes, which has been termed a conversion "out and out (o)." Very frequently, lands are devised to executors to sell; and a distinction has been taken as to when they take an interest or have only a power. A devise of the lands to executors to sell is said to pass the interest in the land; but a devise "that executors shall sell," or "that the lands shall be sold by the executors," is said to give them but a power; a nice distinction, which has caused some discussion (p).

REALTY AND PERSONALTY.

2. Effect of the Conversion.

70. When the conversion of land into money has been completed, the money is clothed with all the properties of personality; therefore, where the will operated as a conversion of the real estate, the shares of persons, who were dead, devolved on their personal representatives (q). But many questions have arisen, as to whether the conversion was complete or otherwise, and also as to the time when the conversion has taken effect.

As to the devolution of the property.

71. Where lands are conveyed or devised to trustees for general purposes, that is, where the conversion, as before mentioned, is "out and out," and it appears clearly to have been the intention of the testator to impress on it the character of personal estate to all intents and purposes, the mere appointment of an executor will be sufficient to carry the property to him (r).

In case of devises to executors.

Where the conversion is directed to be made for particular purposes, as the payment of debts and legacies, and the objects of the trust have been satisfied, or have failed, so much of it as has not been applied in satisfaction of the trusts, will result to the grantor in the case of a conveyance (s), or to the heir, or the residuary legatee, &c., as a resulting trust under a will; in respect of which, however, many questions have arisen as to the intentions of the testator, whether they were to convert the property wholly, or in part only. These questions have arisen between the heir and the next of kin, between the heir and the residuary legatee, or between the representatives of these parties.

Questions between heir and next of kin.

72. The cases as between the heir and the next of kin seem to turn upon the point, whether the testator meant to confine the conversion to the particular purpose named or mentioned in the will, or whether the produce of the real estate should be taken as personalty, whether such purposes take effect or not; for unless the testator sufficiently declared his intention, that in all cases, and to all purposes, it should be converted, so much thereof as was not effectually disposed of would result to the heir (t). The case of Ogle v. Cook (u) seems to be the only one where the decision was in favour of the next of kin and against the heir; and that decision rested on the expressed intention of the testator. As a rule, it has been laid down, and rather strictly adhered to, that where it is a measuring cast between an executor and an heir, the heir shall have the preference (v): for an heir shall not be disinherited, unless by express words or necessary implication (x); and it seems now to be settled, that unless the next of kin is made a specific donee, he never can stand in competition with the heir.

heir and the residuary le-gatee.

73. As between the heir and the residuary legatee the rule has been somewhat relaxed in favour of the latter (y), (t) Randall v. Bookey, Prec. Chan. 162: Emblyn v. Freeman, 1b. 540: City of London v. Garway, 2 Vern. 571: Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. Wms. 20: Stonehouse v. Evelyn, 1b. 252: *Digby v. and in a subsequent case it has been held as settled that if an estate is devised, charged with legacies that fail, the devisee or residuary legatee and not the heir should have the benefit (x), on the authority of which cases it was held in Amphlett v. Parke (a), that where the terms of the will afforded the inference that it was the testator's intention that the produce of his estate should have all the properties of personalty the legatees should have it, to the exclusion of the heir, but this decision was reversed on appeal (b).

PERSONALTY.

74. The third class of cases is between the representatives of persons entitled under a will, and the rule is that such persons shall take money as land or land as money, according as the person, whose representatives they are, would have taken it, had the title accrued in their lifetime (c).

Between representatives.

75. Another question connected with this subject is whether the property so resulting shall be considered as land or money in the hands of the heir. In one case where a testator directed his personal estate to be converted into real, for several purposes, some of which failed, it was held that the heir was entitled to take the residue, after satisfying the purposes which could take effect, not as personalty impressed with the character of realty (d). In cases of converting land into money, where the question has more frequently arisen, it has been expressly held, where the trust was created by a conveyance, that the surplus after satisfying the purposes of the trust should result to the grantor as personalty and go to his executors (e). So, where a man contracts to sell his land, and dies before the conveyance, the heir shall convey the land, and the money shall go to the executor (f).

Where the trust has been created by a will the rule appears to be, that where there is a partial failure only of the purpose to which the produce of the sale is directed to be applied, the heir takes the benefit of such partial failure as personal estate; but if there be a total failure of the purposes, the deviser's intention as to a sale is to be considered as revoked by the events which have happened, and the heir takes the land as real estate (g). Where, however, a discretion was vested in trustees to convert realty into personalty in favour of next of kin, and the trustees did not exercise that discretion, the Court exercised it for them so far as to declare who were the parties that were entitled to take, namely, the testator's next of kin, but that such part of the fund as consisted of real estate should be distributed as realty, so as to descend to their heir-at-law (h).

conversion.

76. As to the time of the conversion, to be complete, it must take place in the lifetime of the owner, but if he contract to sell his lands, that will be a complete conversion, although the conveyance has not been perfected until after his death, and the purchase-money will go to the executor (i). So, where a tenant has an option to purchase, the rents, until the option is made, go to the heir, but from that time the conversion takes place, and the purchase-money shall go to the personal representative (k). So, where the tenant elected to purchase after the death of the lessor, held that the election had relation to the time of the contract, and the property was converted from that time into personalty (l). So, upon a sale of estates under a bankruptcy, the property paying twenty shillings in the pound, and the bankrupt being dead, it has been held, that so much of the real property as was converted in the lifetime of the bankrupt should be deemed personal, and so much as was converted after his death should be considered real estate (m); so, upon a mortgage with a power of sale, reserving the residue to the mortgagor, his executors and administrators, if the sale takes place in the lifetime of the mortgagor, the surplus is personal estate, if after his death, it is real estate (n).

REALTY AND PERSONALTY.

3. Election.

77. Where land is devised in trust to be sold, the parties may elect to take it as land (o), but they must do some act to determine their election, or the land will be deemed to be converted (o); so, where lands are devised to be sold, and the money divided among several persons, none of them can elect to take land instead of money, if one desires a sale (p); so there can be no election where it would be to the prejudice of third parties (q).

Where devised

III. Conversion in cases of Infants, Lunatics, & Partners.

78. As a rule the nature of either an infant's or lunatic's property must not be changed so as to convert them, neither by a trustee, nor by the court itself, which is only a trustee (r); but the reason why an infant's personal estate, turned into real, was still considered personal, was on account of the different ages at which (before the 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 26, preventing infants from making any wills), an infant might dispose of his personal and his real estate, and not in favour to one representative more than another (s); but there were cases where the court deviated from that rule, where it appeared that it would be for the benefit of the party (t).

Rule as to in-

As to lunatic's estate.

In the case of lunatics the first care is to provide for the maintenance of the lunatic, but it is a rule never to change his property, nor to alter the succession of it (u), and a committee is not authorised to purchase real estate with savings, and so alter its nature, for land so purchased will be deemed personalty (v); but the Court have allowed part of the personal estate to be laid out in improving the real estate, if the next of kin, who had an interest, did not shew any reason against it (x).

The committee may, it seems, exercise the same power over a lunatic's estate, with regard to cutting timber, as the lunatic himself might have done (y); but there is no equity for the heir, as against the personal representatives, to have the surplus money, arising from the sale of timber, felled by the order of the Court, restored after the death of the lunatic (z); and the case is the same, where the produce of the timber has been applied in redemption (a). As to when the estate of the lunatic shall be deemed real or personal, under 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 65, see Dig. P. l. tit. LUNATICS, (Renewal, Surplus).

As to the es-

with partnership capital for the purposes of the partnership trade, will have, to every intent, the quality of personal estate, and the same was laid down as the law in Fereday v. Wightwick (c), recognising Townsend v. Devaynes (d). So, in Morris v. Kearsley, real estate held for partnership purposes was declared to be in the nature of personal estate (e); but in earlier cases it had been decided that the user and enjoyment of freehold property for partnership purposes, and an agreement between the co-partners to hold the property in trust for the co-partnership, would not alter the descendible character of the real estate, where the agreement was not so express as to amount to a conversion of the property into personalty (f). In Ripley v. Waterworth the real property was held to be converted, because, on the construction of the deed, it appeared that the parties had contracted that when the partnership determined the property should be converted to all intents and purposes (g); so, if the property held by partners is not used for partnership purposes it has been held not to be converted (h). 79. The principal matters remaining to be considered under this head relating to the distinction between realty and personalty are, 1. The rights and liabilities of the heir in respect of the acts and contracts of the ancestor; 2. Matters affecting the heir, executor, and other persons; 3. What deemed interests in land or otherwise; 4. Statutes relating to real or personal property.

I. The Rights and Liabilities of the Heir.

1. Rights of the Heir.

80. Conditions and covenants real, or such as are annexed to estates, shall descend to the heir, and he, as a rule, alone shall take advantage of them (k); for conditions can only be reserved to the feoffor, donor or lessor, and their heirs, and not to any stranger (l), and the condition descends to the heir by implication of law without express words (m); so, if a man seised in right of his wife, makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and dies, after the condition is broken, the heir of the husband shall enter, for the title of entry by force of the condition, which was created upon the feoffment, and reserved to the feoffor and his heirs, descended (n).

As to conditions and covenants.

So, where covenants run with the land as a covenant to repair, although the lessee covenants with the lessor, his executors, administrators, and assigns, yet his heir may have an action on this covenant (o); but where the breach takes place in the life-time of the covenantee, the action shall be brought by the executor (p); so, where the covenant is in gross the rule does not apply, as where the covenant is with J. S. to make a conveyance to one and his heirs, his heir shall not have an action, sed secus if the covenant is in another conveyance and goes with the estate (q). So, a covenant with a man and his heirs to convey land is good, because the covenant is real, but an obligation to a man and his heirs is bad, because the covenant is personal (q).

The heir may also take advantage of the contracts of the ancestor, therefore, where A.'s father contracted with a carpenter to pay him £1,000 to build a house on his estate and A. dies before the contract is put into execution, the heir may compel the building of the house, and the executor to pay the money (r). So, where a tenant had an option to make a purchase of the land within a given time, and the option was not made until after his death, nevertheless his heir was entitled to have the land and the executor bound to pay the money (s); but the contract must be such as the ancestor is bound to perform, therefore, where a contract for the purchase of an estate was not completed in the ancestor's lifetime, from the terms of it not being ascertained, held, that the heir was not entitled to have the personal estate applied in payment of the purchase-money (t); and as to what was deemed part performance of the contract see Wills v. Stradling (u). So, where A. covenants for himself and his heirs that he will purchase lands and settle the same on himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, and remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to himself in fee, equity will compel the executor to lay out the money, although the heir is both debtor and creditor (x). See further as to conversion of money into land, &c., ante, § 60, et seq.

2. *Liabilities of the Heir.*Conditions and covenants.

81. So, the heir is in like manner bound by the act of the ancestor, and therefore will be bound by all such conditions and covenants as run with the land, whether such were annexed to the estate by the original feoffor, or grantor, or by his immediate ancestor (z); and although an infant, he is equally bound, therefore, if by tenure or prescription certain lands are bound to the repair of bridges and highways, and the same come to an infant by descent or purchase, he shall be obliged to repair in the same manner as if he were of full age (a); so, where a man covenants to convey lands, his heirs shall be bound, although not named (b); and so, even where it was only an agreement and by parol, yet being in consideration of marriage, the court decreed an execution (c); and so, an heir is bound to perform his father's covenant where he is benefited by the contract, though he claims nothing but what was settled on him in strict settlement (d). So if A. contracts to sell lands, and receives great part of the purchase-money, but dies before the conveyance, the heir shall convey the lands, and the money shall go to the executor (e); so, if lands are settled on trustees for raising daughters' portions, the heir shall join in the sale, although the legal estate is not in him (f); but the issue of a tenant in tail is not bound to perform an unexecuted agreement for the sale of an estate, for the heir comes under the statute singly, and not as deriving from the ancestor, who contracted (g); but as to the power of a tenant in tail to dispose of the estate, see 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 74, Prec. in Conv. tit. Fines and Recoveries, 3rd Ed.; and as to the conversion of land into money, see ante, § 68 et seq.: and as to where a court of equity may compel an infant heir to convey lands for the payment of debts or under the contract of the ancestor, see 11 Geo. 4, & 1 W. 4, cc. 47, 60, Dig. Title of the heir, when not to be defeated.

82. The title of an heir is not to be defeated but by some other title certain and unexceptionable; and therefore, where there is proof of the existence of a will, the contents of which do not appear, no conjecture shall be admitted to the prejudice of the heir (h); so, where there are two wills void for uncertainty, the heir will be let in (i); so, where there is not a clear intention to pass the real estate, the court will intend an intestacy in favour of the heir (j); and an heir does not want a clear intention to take by will, though it is otherwise with regard to a deed (k); yet a voluntary conveyance shall not be helped in equity against an heir (l); but where the devise is effective, it shall lie upon the heir to prove that it has been effectively defeated (m); and where one devised his lands to J. S., paying £1,000 to his heir, and on J. S. making default, the heir entered and recovered, yet the court relieved the devisee on payment of principal, interest and costs (n), when the court relieved the devisee against the entry of the heir, on compensation being given for the breach of condition; so, if an estate is limited to trustees for payment of debts and legacies, and the trustees raise the whole money, but do not apply it according to the trust, the heir shall have the lands discharged, and the legatees must seek their remedy against the trustees (o). III. What Deemed Interests in Land or otherwise.

83. The questions as to what are deemed interests in land or otherwise have arisen in a variety of cases relating to rates, water-companies, contracts within the Statute of Frauds, &c.; thus tolls per se have been held not rateable as real property(r), unless where connected with some tangible real property, as sluices, engines, and the like(s). See further Dig. P. III. tit. POOR RATE. So, pipes laid in the ground for the conveyance of gas, have been held to come within the denomination of real property(t); and on the same principle, pipes for the conveyance of water have been held to constitute an interest in land(u), and the reservoir with the water would all descend to the heir(v), and shares in water-companies have been deemed real estates(x), unless as is usually the case, provision is made in the Act of Parliament for making such shares personalty (y); and in Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & Coll. 268, recognising Weekly v. Weekly, cited 2 Y. & Coll. 281, and distinguishing it from the other cases, it was held, that the shares in the Chelsea Waterworks Company were personalty, although there was no provision in the Act making them so, on the ground that in the other cases before mentioned, the corporation had no power to convert the realty into personalty, but in this case they had the fullest power of managing the property entrusted to them in whatever way they thought best.

Contracts giving an interest in land.

Under the Statute of Frauds, contracts for the sale of growing grass have been held to be contracts for the sale of an interest in land (z); so, a contract for the sale of growing poles (a); and so, at one time a crop of turnips, potatoes, or corn, were held to be interests in the land while growing, but not when they had ceased to grow (b). See further, Dig. P. II. tit. FRAUDS (STATUTE).

Occupation of land.

In regard to the rateability of land, it is necessary to distinguish between an occupation of the land of another for a partial or temporary purpose, which is a mere privilege or easement, as a licence to take stone from a quarry, or make a canal and the like, and the permanent interest in the land which the owner has, the former of which is not rateable, and the latter is, in respect of the value of the land (c).

As to the tenures by which lands are held, the estates which may be had in them, or the title which there may be to them, or the injuries affecting them, real property is so clearly distinguished from personalty, as to render any close comparison between them unnecessary.

IV. Statutes relating to Property.

84. By the first general Land Tax Act, 38 G. 3, c. 5, Land tax. and continued Acts, a tax is imposed upon every species of real property, and on some kinds of personalty. See Dig. P. I. tit. LAND TAX. This tax, as regards personalty, is continued by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 98; but the annual tax on offices and other personal estate is repealed by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 12.

By the 6 A. c. 18, provision is made against the fraudulent concealment of the deaths of cestui que vies. See Dig. P. I. tit. ESTATES (LIFE). Death of cestui que vie.

When an estate is made a qualification for office there is a considerable difference observed between realty and personalty as to the amount, as in the case of commissioners of land-tax, trustees of turnpike roads, commissioners of sewers, justices of the peace, members of Parliament, and formerly there was also a game qualification. See the respective titles, Dig. P. I., II., III. Qualification by estate.

By the 9 G. 1, c. 7, the purchase of land to the amount of 30*l*. gives a right to a settlement in a parish, as by other Acts the renting a tenement or land to the value of 10*l*. gives the same right. See Dig. P. III. tit. POOR. Settlement, by estate.

By the early Mortmain Acts, corporations were prevented from disposing of their lands, but by subsequent Acts licence is given to them to make such disposition for particular purposes, as for redeeming the land-tax, building churches, or providing church-yards, &c., making inclosures, or exchanges and the like, but the 9 G. 2, c. 36, has imposed restrictions on all persons, generally, making gifts of either lands or personal estate to charitable uses. See further, Dig. P. I., II. tit. CHARITIES, CHURCH, COMMON; P. III. MORTMAIN, where also similar provisions will be found affecting femes covert, infants, lunatics, and persons having particular estates.

Signification of the word
"land."

§ 86. Land, even in the limited sense in which it is commonly used, applies to all kinds of grounds, as meadows, pastures, woods, moors, marshes, furze, heath, &c.; but not to rents and advowsons and such like things (a); and in this sense it is taken in a grant of land, but in writs and pleadings it is taken in a restricted sense for arable land only (b). Of land, therefore, it will be necessary to consider:—1. What passes under the name of land; 2. By what names the soil will pass.

I. What passes by the name of Land.

In grants.

By the grant of all lands, do pass arable lands, meadows, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furzes, &c. (c). It includes also castles, houses and other buildings erected thereon, therefore, if a man grant all his lands in D., his houses there pass (d). So, if a man let his land, open mines will pass (e); but not such as are not open (e), unless he let the land with all the mines in it, and there are no open mines (e). So, if a man grant his land, all the profits within the bowels of the earth will pass (f); as mines of tin, lead, iron, coal, &c. (f); so, water upon the land, and fish, and a piscary (f). So, if a man demise the herbage of his woods, although the soil does not pass thereby, yet if he afterwards grant all his land in the tenure or occupation of the lessee, the wood passes (g). So, by grant of any land in possession, the reversion thereof will pass; sed secus as to the grant of land in reversion, for the land in possession will not pass (h). And in such grants respect must be had to the estate of the grantor, therefore if a man seised in fee of some lands, have other lands for life or years only in a parish, and grants all his lands, tenements and hereditaments in this parish, and makes livery of seisin of the lands, whereof he is seised in fee in the name of all the rest, no more will pass than the lands whereof he is seised in fee, for otherwise it would be a forfeiture for those lands (i); but wherever no forfeiture would be occasioned, leasehold lands held with, and reputed part of a freehold estate, would pass by the conveyance of the freehold by force of the general words, "all meadows, lands, &c., to the said freehold belonging or appertaining (k)."

In a devise, greater latitude is given to the construction of the words, therefore, where one devises all his freehold houses in A., and has none but leasehold houses there, the leaseholds shall pass; sed secus in a grant (l); and in a devise such a description will be deemed sufficient, by which

By a grant of wood it is said that the land passes (b). In Whilster v. Paslow (c) it was held that by an exception in a lease of "all woods, underwoods, coppices, and hedgerows," the soil itself is excepted, but by an exception of "all timber trees," no soil is excepted but that in which they grow; and in Pincomb v. Thomas (d) a sale of "all saleable underwoods growing" does not pass the soil.

Wood, &c.

The word "farm" properly signifies a capital or principal messuage, and a great quantity of demesnes thereto belonging, and by that name houses, lands and tenements might pass (e); but in its modern acceptation, it is taken for that which is held by a person standing in the relation of tenant to a landlord (g); and the word "farm" in a will is sufficient to pass a leasehold estate, if it appear to have been the testator's intention that it should so pass (h). So, by the grant of all farms, leases for years may pass (i).

Farm.

By the name of mines or minerals of lead &c. the land itself shall pass in a grant if livery be made, and it might formerly be recovered in an assize (k); but see 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, abolishing these real actions, Dig. Lord Coke lays it down, that it does not pass (o); but others maintain that one having a several fishery must be owner of the soil (p). In Partheriche v. Mason (q), it was held, that where a man has a several fishery, the presumption is that he is owner of the soil. As to the right of fishery, which is an incorporeal hereditament, see post, § 304.

Profits of the
land.

By a grant of the profits of the soil the land will pass, as, if a man grant all his meadows or all his pastures, the land passes, for what is land but the profits thereof (r)? But as to what was formerly understood by the vesture of the land, see Keilw. 48; 4 Leon. 43; Palm. 174; Ow. 37. On the other hand, if a man grant the herbage of the land, the land itself will not pass; because the grantee has only a particular right in the land and shall not have the houses, trees, mines and other real things (s); so, if a man grant a liberty to dig turves, the land shall not pass (t).

MANORS.

§ 88. A manor is a tract of land originally granted by the king to a person of rank, part of which was given by the grantee to his followers, and the rest he retained under the name of his demesnes, and that which remained uncultivated was called the lord's waste and served for public roads and for common of pasture for the lord and his tenants. Definition.

A manor consists of demesnes and services; whenever the demesnes are severed from the manor, or the services become extinct, then the manor itself is destroyed (u); but although many manors have been thus destroyed, yet they continue to be called manors, and a reputed manor will pass in a conveyance by the word "manor" (x). And it is not necessary to prove a manor to be a continuing manor for all purposes (y). Reputed manor.

Manors were formerly called baronies, and are still called lordships, and each lord or baron was empowered to hold a court called a court-baron, which was an inseparable ingredient of every manor; and if the number of suitors should prove not sufficient to make a jury or homage, that is two tenants at the least, the manor itself is lost (z).

Manor cannot be divided.

What passes under the word.

It is a settled rule, that a manor cannot be granted at this day, a manor therefore cannot be divided by the act of the party, for that would be to create a new manor (a). And although a manor may not be divided by the act of the party, yet it may by act of law, if therefore upon a partition between parceners, parcels of the demesnes and services are allotted to each, each hath a manor, being in by act of law (b); but otherwise joint-tenants, co-parceners and tenants in common fall within the rule that a manor cannot be divided by act of the party (b).

Whatever before the Statute of Frauds might pass by livery of seisin, either in deed or in law, might pass without deed (c); therefore not only the rents and services, parcel of the manor, might with the demesnes, as the principal and more worthy, pass by livery without deed, but all things regardant, appendant and appurtenant to the manor, as incidents or adjuncts to the same, might, together with the manor, pass without deed (c). But things which are not parcel of the manor, will not pass by the grant of a manor, and therefore if one have a manor, and after purchase a warren to it, and then grant away the manor, the warren will not pass thereby; and yet if by the union time out of mind they have gotten the reputation of appendancy, perhaps by the grant of the manor, cum pertinentiis, these things may pass (d).

By the grant of a manor also divers towns may pass; so, an honor may pass by this name, and so also a castle and a hundred, and one manor also, that is parcel of another, may pass by the grant of that manor, whereof it is parcel. So, on the other hand by the grant of an honor, may pass one or more seignories, manors and divers other lands; and so a castle may contain one or more manors (e); but by a castle most commonly is signified no more than the house or building and the parcel of ground inclosed, wherein it stands.

CORPOREAL

By the 17 E. 2. de Prærogativa Regis (see Dig. P. II. tit. Advowson. Advowson) the Queen's grant of a manor will not pass an advowson appendant, without express mention of it; but where the King granted a manor with all its appurtenances, as fully as the same came to and were possessed by him, an advowson appendant to the manor was held to pass (f); and the grant of a manor with advowsons &c. thereunto belonging, was held not to extend to an advowson severed in ancient times, though it was appendant three hundred years ago (g). If a man seised of a manor in D., devises all his Lands. lands and hereditaments in D., the manor, being an hereditament, shall pass (h); but if he has lands in D., not parcel of the manor, it seems doubtful whether the manor would pass by a devise of "all his lands" there (h).

So, if the party escape, after having been legally arrested, the officer may, upon fresh suit, break open even the outer door, in order to retake him (n).

What is burg-

To constitute a burglary or breaking into a house, it must be the dwelling or regular residence of the owner (o), therefore a set of chambers in an inn of court or college is deemed a distinct dwelling-house for this purpose (p); so, even a loft, over a stable used as the abode of a coachman, may be burglariously entered (q); but burglary cannot be committed in a tent or booth at a fair. A messuage or mansion includes not only the dwelling-house, but also all outhouses, as barns, stables, cowhouses, and dairyhouse, if they be parcel of the mansion, although they be not under the same roof or lying contiguous to it (u); and the conveyance or demise of a messuage passes all under the same roof, unless, at the date of the instrument, some part had been separated by a partition, and not occupied with the messuage for many years (v); and so a conveyance of a messuage "with the appurtenances" will pass fixtures usually removable, unless they be parted therefrom before the execution of the deed (x). But by the 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 13, no building although within the same curtilage with the dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, shall be deemed to be part of such dwelling-house for the purpose of burglary, or for any of the purposes aforesaid, unless there be a communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediate or by means of a covered and inclosed passage leading from one to the other. The term "outhouse" may be applied to a school-room, separated from the dwelling-house by a narrow passage (y). And before the above-mentioned Act it was held applicable to a dairyhouse or mill-house, if connected with the dwelling-house (z). Outhouses are mentioned in the Larceny Act (a), and also in the Vagrant Act, where it is provided that any person found lodging in any barn or outhouse, &c., without giving a satisfactory account of himself, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond. An open building standing out of the sight of the dwelling-house has been held not to be an outhouse within the Larceny Act (b); so, not a cart-hovel standing in a field away from other buildings (c); so, it seems a mill was not deemed an outhouse before that

If a yard is common to several houses, let to different tenants, the possession thereof belongs to the landlord subject only to a right of way in such tenants (g). An area, like a yard, is provided for in the Vagrant Act; and stealing from an area is felony under the Larceny Act, but breaking into an area was not burglary at common law (h). Curtilages are court-yards, or back sides or pieces of ground lying near to and included within the same fence as the dwelling-house, which, it seems, may be sufficiently large to allow cattle to be levant and couchant therein, and therefore that a person may prescribe for common appurtenant in respect of a house and a curtilage (i). A church is otherwise called a benefice, which is either a rectory or a vicarage. By the grant of a rectory or parsonage will pass the house, the glebe, the tithes and offerings belonging to it; and by the grant of a vicarage will pass as much as belongs unto it, as the vicarage-house, &c. (g).

After presentation, the freehold is in the parson, and he may maintain ejectment for recovery of the same (r). So, no one may preach in his pulpit without his consent (s). So, if the walls, windows, or doors, or any part of the freehold of the church, is injured by any person, the incumbent of the rectory may have his action for the damages (t); but while the church is in his hands, he has it under certain regulations and restrictions (u). Therefore he cannot alienate any part of the chancel so as to deprive his successors of their power over it (x). So, in the case of Cowen and Pym (y), it was held, that albeit the freehold of the church be in the parson, yet if the lord of a manor or any other has a house in a parish, and he and all those whose estate he has in the mansion, has had a seat in an aisle of the church for him and his family only, and has repaired it at his proper charges, the seat therein shall be deemed his frank tenement; and so, in Francis and Ley (z) the repairing an aisle in a church and the using to sit therein was held to make this proper and peculiar to his house, and he could not be displaced; but the constant sitting and burying there without using to repair it, gains no peculiar property (a).

residing in another parish, have no such rights; so soon as an occupier of a pew ceases to be a parishioner, his right to the pew ceases (c); although it should seem, that even a non-parishioner may claim an aisle or a chancel by prescription (d), but he must have such right as appurtenant to a house, although the house be out of the parish (e). If a pew is rightly appurtenant, the occupancy of it must pass with the house, and individuals cannot, by contract between themselves, defeat the general right of the parish (f). A prescriptive right cannot be exercised by a transfer to a non-parishioner (f), but a right to a faculty pew may be apportioned, if the house be divided into two (g), and where the prescription is interrupted a jury is not bound to presume a faculty from long undisturbed possession (h); and reparation from time to time is necessary to be pleaded and proved in order to make out a prescriptive right to a pew (i); but lining and putting new cushions is however not a sufficient reparation (k). The parson or rector impropriate is entitled to the chief seat (l), and the vicar may by prescription claim a seat in the chancel (m). As to the regulation of pews under the New Church Building Acts, see Dig. P. II. tit. CHURCH (PEWS). As to a right to a pew as an easement, see post, § 481 et seq.

Right of burial.

91. By the common law the rector has the freehold in the churchyard, subject to the rights of the parishioners to be buried there, and he may bring an action of trespass, if his right be invaded (s); so, the trees and the grass belong to him, and if cut down, the incumbent may bring his action, and this is not triable in the Spiritual Court (t); so, the lessee of the incumbent, if the churchyard be let, may bring his action, the soil and freehold being in the incumbent (u), although, where there is both a rector and a vicar, it seems doubtful to whom the trees belong (x). And such freehold is said to be in him for public purposes, and not for private emolument (y); therefore although a clergyman cannot be compelled to bury the corpse of any person, though a parishioner, in any particular vault or other particular part of the churchyard (z), yet he cannot grant the exclusive use of a vault—only leave to bury there in each particular instance (a); so, no man can make a private door into the churchyard without the consent of the minister whose freehold the church is, and a faculty also from the

The churchwardens are by virtue of their office to see that the footpaths are kept in proper order, and the fences in repair (f); and it seems that by custom the parishioners are bound to make the repairs (g); yet if the owner of lands adjoining to the churchyard have used, time out of mind, to repair so much of the fence thereof as adjoineth to their ground, such custom is a good custom, and the churchwardens have an action at common law for the same (h). COMMONS AND WASTE LANDS.

§ 94. Distinction between Commons and Waste Lands. What Interest therein rateable. Cattle-gates. Disturbance. 95. Encroachments.	§ 95. Appropriation. Rights as to Fences. Liabilities to repair Fences. To preserve Boundaries. Commissioners to ascertain Boundaries.

tween commons and wastes.

94. Commons or common fields, as the name imports, are pieces of ground in which individuals have a joint and several property, and are distinguished from wastes, or waste lands, which are such parts of a manor as the lord originally left waste or uncultivated for the common use and benefit of himself and his tenants with his licence, whence arose the incorporeal hereditaments known by the name of "right of common," as to which see post, § 267, and as to the rights of the lord and the tenant see post, COPYHOLDS, § 845.

What interest therein rate-able.

Land over which there is a right of common, and which affords a beneficial occupation, is rateable, but the occupier must have such a possession as will enable him to maintain trespass, which a mere commoner cannot do (g). Most usually the ownership of the soil is in the lord of the manor where it is situate, but there are many cases where there is a joint and several property in fields, called on that account "common fields," which are used for their common benefit. In that case each party is in possession of a distinct interest for which he may maintain ejectment, and consequently is rateable (h). So, a cattle-gate or a right of pasture within any field held by several in common is a tenement, which was held to pass by lease and release, now by release only (i), and could not be devised but according to the Statute of Frauds (k). So, ejectment may be maintained for it (l). Cattle-gates are recognised in the Game Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 10 (m).

CORPOREAL

Where any person makes use of a common to the injury of the commoner, this is called a disturbance, for which the party has his remedy (n). Disturbance.

95. If any person build upon or inclose commons or waste land without the license of the lord this as against a subject is termed an encroachment, but as against the Crown a purpresture or encroachment. If however an inclosure has existed with the knowledge of the lord of the manor or of his steward for some time, notice must be given to the party to throw it up, before ejectment can be brought against the tenant as a trespasser (o); but it has been a vexatio quaestio, whether a lessee who encroaches on the waste can acquire a possessory right after an uninterrupted possession, or whether he shall not be supposed to have inclosed for the benefit of the lessor after the term (p); prima facie every inclosure made by a tenant adjoining the demised premises is presumed to be made by him for the benefit of the landlord; but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence (q). See further post, as to title gained by encroachment, TITLES TO THINGS REAL. Encroachment

A clause is usually inserted in Inclosure Acts, that no encroachment in a waste which has existed twenty years before the passing of the Act shall be considered as part of the waste, and no title derived by virtue of such encroach- Inclosure Acts.

ment shall be disputed. A similar clause is to be found in the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 115, for inclosing common and arable fields (r), and so likewise in 10 G. 4, c. 50, which contains several provisions as to unlawful inclosure (s).

Approval.

The lord's right to approve as against the commoner is recognised by the 20 H. 3, c. 4; 13 E. 1, c. 46, and 3 & 4 E. 6, c. 3 (t), and by subsequent acts as the 13 G. 3, c. 38; 41 G. 3, c. 109, the General Inclosure Act, and other Acts, lords and tenants are empowered to inclose commons under certain regulations (u); also as to exchanges of lands lying in common fields 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 30 (x). An inclosure has the effect of changing the tenure of lands by converting copyhold into freehold unless the contrary be expressly provided for (y), and the legal freehold does not vest in the allottee until the execution and proclamation of the award (z).

Rights as to fences.

With the subject of inclosure is connected that of fences; whatever serves to part fields one from another is a fence; and it may be either a hedge, a ditch, a bank, wall, gate, &c.; for a ditch may be a legal fence if it serve the purpose of a fence (a). Where two adjacent fields are separated by a hedge and ditch, the hedge prima facie belongs to the field where the ditch is not; if there are two ditches, one on each side the hedge, then the ownership of the hedge must be ascertained by proving acts of ownership (b). For a person making a ditch usually cuts to the extremity of his land (b); and where lands abutting on a ditch, and a lane on each side, belong to different owners, the presumption is that the hedge and ditch on either side belong to the owner or occupier of the land on that side (c); and if a man makes a bank, it as well as the ditch, will, it is presumed, be made on his own ground, and, therefore the land which constitutes the ditch is in point of law a part of the close, though it be on the outside of the bank (d); for although a party is supposed to dig the ditch at the extreme point of the land, yet he may not dig so near, as to cause his neighbour's land to fall in (e).

A tenant is bound to repair the fences, and a landlord may maintain an action against him for not so doing, upon the ground of the injury done to his inheritance (f); and it is no excuse that the plaintiff did not set out proper wood for repairs, if the defendant do not shew that a request was made to the plaintiff, or a custom of the country in this respect (g). So, a tenant is bound to preserve the boundaries of the lands held by him, and if he permit them to be destroyed, so that the lands cannot be distinguished, he will be compelled to give others of equal value, the same to be ascertained by a commission issuing out of the Court of Chancery (h), and the same applies to cases where there are several co-lessees (i). See further as to waste, post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL. The Building Act contains several provisions as to party-walls (k). The Malicious Injuries Act imposes a penalty of £5 on any person destroying any fence, wall, gate or stile, and makes a second offence punishable with twelve calendar months' imprisonment and hard labour (l). of church property, where they are unknown or disputed. In other cases the courts of equity have from an early period afforded relief either by directing an issue, or granting a commission, as the justice of the case required, the granting such commissions being a very ancient branch of equitable jurisdiction (m) in cases where there exists no remedy by distress (n); so, where there has been an intermixture of boundaries occasioned by unity of possession (o); so, where charity lands have been let at a great undervalue, and are intermixed with other land belonging to the tenant, the Court will grant a commission (p). But the issuing of such commissions is not a matter of course; it will be granted upon weighty grounds only (q); the Court, therefore, will not grant a commission if defendant denies he has any of plaintiff's lands in his possession, for that would be to admit plaintiff's title in general; but if defendant has admitted plaintiff's title, and the dispute is about the particular lands, then a commission is proper (r). The plaintiff must establish by evidence or the admission of the defendant his right to some land before a commission will be granted (s); so, the plaintiff must make out that he has some equitable ground upon which to call for the assistance of this court (t); so, the bill must clearly shew that without the assistance of the court, the boundaries cannot be ascertained (u); and such commission does not usually lie to settle

But independently of the question of property, a man may be liable to an action if he suffer the branches of his tree to overhang the lands of another so as to deprive the latter of air or light (g), on the general principle that the owner of the land is entitled to whatever is perpendicularly situated above or beneath its surface (h); unless he have any claim to an easement (i). § 97. There are certain privileged places, as forests, chases, parks, and warrens fitted for the preservation of animals feræ naturæ, the property in which is as long only as they remain in the custody and power of the owner. The forest which is the most ancient of these and belongs solely to the Crown, was originally governed by laws peculiar to itself, but is now under the management of her Majesty's commissioners of woods and forests (m). A chase is in the hands of a subject a privileged place for beasts of the forest (n). A park is an inclosed place privileged for the keeping of wild beasts, which could not formerly be made without her Majesty's licence or at least immemorial prescription (o). A free warren is a place privileged by prescription or by her Majesty's grant for the preservation of beasts or fowls of warren, as hares, conies, partridges, pheasants (p); but a grant by her Majesty of free warren, in lands of which her Majesty is seised in fee, is only a grant of free warren in gross, and will not pass by the grant of a manor and all free warrens thereto appertaining (q). MINES AND MINERALS.

100. Right under Licence or Lease.

IV. Rateability of Mines.

Under this head may be considered: 1. The property in mines; 2. Grant of mines; 3. Right to work or open mines; 4. Rateability &c. of mines.

I. Property in Mines.

Part of the freehold.

98. Mines are a part of the freehold, and prima facie the owner of the freehold has a right to the mines and minerals underneath (s); but this is only a presumption of law which may be rebutted by shewing a distinct title to the surface and to that which is underneath (t); for mines may form a distinct possession and different inheritances (u).

To establish an adverse claim to the minerals against the owner of the surface the clearest evidence is necessary, therefore, where the lord proved a uniform exercise of enjoyment of his right to the minerals, it was held to prevail (y); and it was sufficient for him to shew that the right had been exercised, if not in the particular lands in question, yet in lands similarly circumstanced (y); but it is necessary, however, for the claimant to shew that the right has been exercised over the minerals in question; shewing acts of ownership as lord, by shooting, taking estrays and the like is not sufficient to establish the right to the minerals (z); so leases of minerals in other parts of the waste will not be admitted in evidence (z).

As to the claim of the owner of the surface to minerals, it has been held, that the presumption, that the right to the minerals accompanied the fee-simple of the land, might be rebutted by the absence of enjoyment by the plaintiff, and the user of persons not the owners of the soil (a); but an adverse possession of copper-mines for upwards of twenty years by certain tenants customary as well as freehold was held sufficient to establish their right (b).

If minerals are once severed from the inheritance, they are personal chattels, which go to the person next entitled to the inheritance (c).

Mines in the highways belong to the owner of the soil (d).

In the case of inclosure it appears, that if minerals are not mentioned in the Act, the several owners will be interested in them according to the nature of the tenure, but mines will not be reserved to the lord under the ordinary clause "saving all royalties (e)"; so, although allotments under such Acts usually carry the soil with them, yet if a party's right to the mines is expressly excepted in the Act, his rights and liabilities as owner will remain in the same parish, although the allotments under the Act are carried into other parishes (f).

Right to dower
in mines.

Dower is due of mines wrought during the coverture, whether by the husband or by lessees for years (g); so, whether the mines are under the husband's own land, or have been absolutely granted to him to take the whole stratum in the land of others (g); so, if land assigned for dower contain an open mine, tenant in dower may work it for her own benefit (g), but she is not entitled to unopened mines (g).

Dower may be assigned of mines either collectively with other lands or separately of themselves, and it shall be assigned by metes and bounds if practicable; otherwise, either by a proportion of the profits, or separate alternate enjoyment of the whole for certain periods (g). An assignment of dower by deed, with livery of seisin, was held to be a good assignment (h). As to dower generally, see post, ESTATES (DOWER).

Royal mines.

Mines which contain gold and silver are denominated "royal mines," because they belong exclusively to the Crown (i); insomuch that although her Majesty grant lands with all mines in them, royal mines will not pass (k); and by force of the prerogative her Majesty may come upon any man's estate and search for mines (l).

II. Grant of Mines or Minerals.

§ 99. A grant of mines to take the whole stratum of the land of others is the grant of a real hereditament in fee-simple (n); but that the lands may pass under the grant of the minerals it is necessary that there should be livery of seisin (o); otherwise only a liberty to dig for the minerals passes (p); and the owner of the soil is in that case not excluded from digging for minerals, therefore when a mortgagor and mortgagee in fee joined in conveying land to a purchaser, who by the same instrument covenanted with the mortgagor, his heirs and assigns, that it should be lawful for them to dig for coals and carry them away, held that this was a licence only and did not exclude the purchaser from getting coal there (q); so, in respect of the mortgagor it could not operate as an exception or reservation, he not having the legal estate in him, the covenant therefore would operate only as a grant, and a grant would not pass the land itself without livery (q); a reservation of this kind must expressly shew that it was the intention of the parties, that the mines should not pass in the conveyance (r); otherwise, although the grantor may have the legal estate, the mines may be granted over, and a mere licence to dig for the minerals is thus only reserved (s). It seems however to be settled that to a grant of mines is necessarily incident the right to enter and work them without any express authority for that purpose.

III. Right to work or open mines.

Right under licence or lease.

§ 100. There may be a right to work mines either under a licence or a lease, the latter of which is the most usual and proper. A licence is not of the same force as a lease; for the latter gives an actual estate in the land, but the former gives only a right to the minerals as personal chattels, when they are dug (t); so, although a licence is not revocable at the will of the grantor, as it carries an interest in the land, yet it is determinable on simple notice (x). So, if it do not contain clear words to give the grantee the exclusive right to dig for minerals, the grantor or his assigns may exercise the right in common with him (y).

As to the right to work old mines or open new ones by persons in other cases, having an estate less than a freehold of inheritance, that depends upon the nature of the estate.

Tenant for life.

A tenant for life may dig for gravel, lime, clay, stone and similar minerals for the purposes of repairing the buildings or manuring the land (z). So, of such mines as are open, he may dig and take the profits (a), but he may not open new mines (b). Yet a tenant for life of coal mines may open new pits or shafts for the working old veins of coals; it being hazardous to grant an injunction to stay the working of a coal mine, because it may ruin the colliery for ever (c). As to waste by tenant for life, see post, tit. WASTE.

(c) Clavering v. Clavering, 2 P. Wms. 388; S. C., Sel. Chan. Cas. 79.

It is now settled, that in the absence of special custom the property in minerals is vested in the lord, and the right of possession in the tenant; consequently neither party can do any act to profit by the mines without the consent of the other (d). And a copyholder shall have trespass against the lord for breaking his close and digging his coals (e); and so the action is maintainable against the owner of an adjoining colliery for breaking and entering the subsoil of a copyholder, and taking coals therein, although no trespass be committed on the surface (f). The tenant, however, on the other hand has no right to the minerals (g), and if he work the mines he commits waste (h), unless where he has the right by special custom (i). (As to the rights of lords and copyholders, see post, TENURES, §§ 853 et seq.; waste by copyholders, see post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL).

Lord and copyholder.

As between landlord and tenant it appears that the lessee for years may work mines that are open, for they are the annual profit of the land, but he cannot make new mines, for that would be waste (k); but if a man has mines hid in his land, and leases his land and all mines therein, the lessee may then open any mine (k). (As to waste by tenant for years, see post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL).

As between the patron and the parson, it appears that if the parson open a mine in his glebe, this will not be waste, for otherwise none of the mines under glebe lands would be opened (l).

Exceptions.
Ejectment.	An action of ejectment is maintainable for recovering the possession of a mine (t); but it seems doubtful whether ejectment will lie for an unopened mine (x); so, ejectment cannot be brought by the lord of a manor for mines situate in the lands of his copyhold tenant in the absence of special custom (y); so, it will not lie in respect of a license only to work mines (z).

are distinguished, according to the uses to which they are

I. ~~Public Ways.~~

Public ways are either common ways or highways. A common way is such as leads from a village into fields, &c. (c); and this may be prescribed for (d).

A highway is a way to a market or a great road, &c., What a high-a market-town or not it is a highway if common to all the people (e); so, a street is a highway (f); so, a navigable river is to some purposes esteemed a highway (g); so, a bridge (h); so, a towing-path (i); so, a railway (k); but a flight of stairs down to the Thames is not necessarily a highway (l).

There may be a highway although it may be circuitous (m); and even, as it seems, although there be no thoroughfare (n).

Highway
founderous.

When a highway becomes founderous or out of repair, the passengers may go on the adjoining land, even over sown corn (o); and such ways, termed outlets, are held to be part of the highway (o); but in order to make such way the Queen's highway, it was formerly necessary to have a writ of ad quod damnum (p), which is now very rarely required, since the highways are regulated by act of Parliament.

Turnpike roads.

Turnpike roads are highways, but every road where toll is taken is not necessarily a highway, for the law recognises "toll-thorough" and "toll-traverse," the former of which is a toll for passing over the private soil of another (q), and the latter is a toll for passing through a highway (q). Toll-traverse cannot be demanded without consideration (r); toll-thorough on the other hand may be demanded without any consideration (s). These two kinds of toll and also toll-turn, which is a toll on beasts returning from a market, a man may have on his own ground and might have assize for them (t).

CORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

The property in the soil of the highway is in the owner of the adjoining land (x), who may maintain trespass for digging the ground of the highway (y), and also ejectment, for the sheriff may give him possession subject to the easement (z). To him also belong all trees upon it and all mines underneath (a), and he may carry water under it (a). Hence it has been said that cattle should be driven directly along the highway, and not suffered to linger, for if they do any thing but pass and repass it is a trespass (b), for the property of the soil being vested in the owner, a lawful user may be shewn (c). So, it has been held that trustees of a turnpike road have not the soil of the road vested in them, so that they can give consent to the diverting a public foot-path into it, without a special clause in the statute vesting the right in them (d), although by the 3 G. 4, c. 126, ss. 86 et seq., they are authorized to sell roads become useless, reserving mines and minerals to the owner.

the soil.

The owner of the soil is generally understood to be the owner of the close adjoining, to whom the highway itself, ad medium filum viæ, belongs, and consequently the presumption prima facie is, that the land belongs to the owner on each side (e); and the rule is the same whether the owner be a freeholder, leaseholder or copyholder (f); so, the presumption is that the strips of land at the sides of the road belong to such owner (g), but acts of ownership on the part of the lord of the manor may be admitted to repel such presumption (h); so, if the narrow slips lie contiguous to or communicate with open commons, the presumption in favour of the landowner fails or is much narrowed (i); so, where such strip had been commonly reputed waste (k).

Trees in the highways.

As to the property in trees growing in the highway the old text writers appear to be not agreed, some contending that they belong to the lord of the manor, and others, to the freeholder (l). In Brownlow, 42, it is laid down, that to the owner of the soil on both sides of the way of common right belong the trees that grow in the lane, whether he be lord or freeholder, although it seems that the question will turn very frequently on the usage of taking the profits of the trees (m).

Mines, minerals, &c.

By the 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 24, s. 18, minerals under the road are made by virtue of the act to belong to the original proprietor of the land, who shall have the liberty of working the same in such manner as is usual for carrying on works of that kind; and by the 4 G. 4, c. 95, s. 75, the right of pasturage is reserved to those who are entitled to the same (n); and by the General Inclosure Act it is provided that the grass and herbage growing on the roads that are set out shall for ever belong to the proprietor of the lands adjoining on both sides the way.

Repair of highways.

It is settled, that, of common right, the parish, where the highway is, ought to repair (o). And no agreement whatever with any person can relieve the parish from this common-law liability (p); and if there be any one who is bound to repair, but becomes insolvent, the justices may cause the

So, a hamlet may be charged by immemorial prescription(x); or a township may be chargeable by prescription for the maintenance of all ways within their boundary(y); and mere usage without the averment of any consideration will suffice to bind such districts(z); but it seems doubtful whether one parish may be bound to repair a way within another parish(a).

CORPOREAL

Bridges, though deemed to be highways, must be repaired by the county(b); and by the 22 H. 8, c. 5, s. 9, the county is bound to repair the highway at the ends of bridges to the extent of three hundred yards' distance from the end, which seems to have been the common law(c), see further as to bridges, Dig. P. II. tit. BRIDGES.

Individuals may be bound to repair from different causes, as by prescription, tenure or inclosure. A party cannot be held liable by prescription, unless it be in respect of some consideration as the taking of toll or other profit, for the act of the ancestor cannot charge the heir without profit(d); but a corporation may be bound by prescription without consideration(e); but the occupier is bound to cleanse the dikes and ditches adjoining to his land without prescription (g), and this part of the common law is confirmed by the statute (h).

A private person may likewise be bound by reason of his tenure (i); and so his alienee (k); and if the lands come into the hands of the Crown, yet the obligation or duty continues (l), but the occupier and not the owner is liable (m); and if the owner allow his land to lie fresh, he will not be excused from repair (i).

By inclosure.

A party may likewise be bound to repair by reason of an inclosure of the land on either side of the highway, for by this means he deprives the public of their common-law right to go upon the adjacent land in case the road be foundeours and out of repair (n). If a person inclose land on one side, the other side being anciently inclosed, he shall be compelled to repair all the way, but if there be no ancient inclosure he will be obliged to repair only half the way (o). If the party neglect to repair, the passengers may make gaps in the inclosure, and go upon the land to avoid the bad road (p), and the Court in one case ordered an inclosure to be prostrated until the road was repaired (q); and the like law prevails in case a party encroaches on the highway, for he is bound to repair it until the encroachment is removed (r); but the bare removal will not discharge one who is bound to repair by reason of tenure, because in that case he is always bound (r). But the obligation to repair by reason of inclosure or encroachment extends only to inclosures made by the party, not to those made by act of the law, as

II. Private Ways.

103. A private way is said to be such as goes to a church, or to the common fields of a town, or to a private house, or to a particular village which terminated there; and it is so called because it is for the particular benefit of the inhabitants of such place only, and not for all the queen's subjects; and the right, which may be claimed by particular persons to use such way, is an incorporeal hereditament known by the name of a Right of Way, as to which see further, post, § 360 et seq. But whether a way be a private way or a highway depends much upon reputation (t).

What is a private way.

A private way may become public either by act of Parliament, as by inclosure acts, or by its presumed dedication to public use. As to what constitutes a dedication has been a matter of some question. At first it seems to have depended upon the length of time that the road had been left without any bar or other obstruction (u), but the intention has since been considered as the rule (x); but the tenant cannot bind the inheritance in cases of this kind (y); so, if the dedication be not made openly, and with a deliberate purpose, it will not be admitted (z); so, where it was proved that a bar had been put up, the right of way was negatived (a); so, where the owner was compellable to make an occupation road for particular persons, this was held to rebut the presumption of a dedication (b); but where a place was altogether left without bar, or chain, or any other mark

104. Water, in the general sense of the term, is comprehended under land, and was not demandable by the name of water in a præcipe, (before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, abolishing that writ, see Dig. P. III. tit. LIMITATIONS), but the land whereupon the water flowed was demandable as so many acres terræ aquâ coopertas (e); so, if a man be seised of a river, and by deed grants separalem piscariam in the same, and makes livery of seisin secundum formam chartæ, the soil does not pass [but on this point see further, post, § 108 (e)] nor the water, for the grantor may take water there; and if the river become dry, he may take the benefit of the soil (e); for the same reason, if a man grant aquam suam, the soil shall not pass, but the piscary within only (e); but stagnum (a pool) consists of land and water, and therefore by that name land, as well as water, will pass; so, by the name of a gulf or deep pit land and water will pass (e).

Water, like land, is distinguishable into different parts, as the sea, rivers, docks, canals, ponds, and sewers, to each of which are attached different rights and incidents; to these may be added a watercourse or the use of running water, which being an incorporeal hereditament demands a distinct consideration in its proper place.

I. The Sea.

Rights connected with the sea.

105. The sea is open to all the queen's subjects for all lawful purposes, it being called "the great highway of the world," and therefore common to all (f); but this general right may be restrained by particular rights acquired either by grant from the Crown, or prescription which supposes a grant, or by custom. The matters connected with the sea are the jurisdiction to be exercised on the ocean as a municipal right, the property in the soil of the sea itself, and herein of land derelict, alluvion, and islands arising therein, the right of fishery, and of taking wrecked goods, and lastly the right of bathing in the sea.

admiralty or common-law jurisdiction.

That arm or branch of the sea which lies, as Lord Hale observes, within the fauces terræ, where a man may discern between shore and shore, is within the common-law jurisdiction, that is, within the jurisdiction of the sheriff or coroner; that part which lies without, the main sea or the high sea (g), is within the sole jurisdiction of the Admiralty: so, below the low water mark the admiral has the sole jurisdiction; but between the high water mark and the low water mark the common law and the admiral have divisum imperum interchangeably, scil. one super aquam and the other super terram (h). These distinctions, so far as regards judicial proceedings, are of less importance now than they were formerly, in consequence of the statutory provisions respecting the admiral's jurisdiction; (see Dig. P. I. tit. ADMIRAL, ADMIRALTY); but so far as regards private rights there may still be questions arising out of this distinction, as, where a contract took place in the Thames adjoining St. Katharine's, prohibition was granted (i).

Property in the soil of the sea.

It is agreed, that, as the queen has the sovereign dominion over the sea, she has the right of property in the soil; hence it follows that what was the queen's when covered with water becomes hers also when the waters have left it (k); therefore in one case where a quantity of ground was left by the sea, and the question was whether it belonged to the King by his prerogative, or whether he whose grounds were adjoining should have it, it was adjudged that if the sea gradually decreases, the ground shall not belong to the King; sed secus, where a great quantity which was drowned before is left (l). So, if the sea-marks were gone, so that it could not be known if ever there was land there, the land gained from the sea was held to belong to the King; but if the sea covered the land at the flux of the sea, and retreated at the reflux, so that the sea-marks were known, such land should belong to the owner (m). So, lords of manors may claim lands derelict by grant or prescription (n); but they cannot prescribe to have lands beyond the low water mark because a subject can have no use of such, yet lands between the high and low water mark may be prescribed to belong to a manor, because such lands are dry every twelve hours in every day (o); so, grants may be made of land to be recovered, but in this it is to be understood that the land must be reduced into possession within a reasonable time (p).

Alluvion, by which is understood the secret accession of Alluvion. soil to other soil, produced by the sea casting up sand and earth so as to make fresh soil, belongs not to the queen, but to the owner of the ground to which it attaches itself, on the same principle as lands gradually derelict belong to the subject (q); and it is said by a writer of authority that a grant of a manor or land contiguous to the sea, und cum maritimis incrementis, will pass the right to alluvion, though not to lands derelict (r).

There is also a distinction taken between alluvion which is an imperceptible increase, and avulsion which is an accession of land by its breaking off from other land; in this latter case if the direption be sudden, and it be unknown from what land it is severed, it will belong to the Crown; but if the owner of the land from which it is torn off be known, it shall belong to him (s). So, in respect to islands rising in the sea, they belong primâ facie to the queen as universal occupant (t); but if that part of the sea where the island rises happens to belong to a subject, that forms an exception to the rule of law, and may be claimed by the owner upon the general principle that a man shall be enabled to repossess himself of his land in all cases where he can establish his claim (x).

sea.

A right of fishing in the sea is properly a public right, the exercise of which is regulated by statutory provisions for the benefit of the public; (see Dig. P. 1. tit. FISH, FISHERIES); but in this as in other cases of public rights there may be a claim to a private right grounded on an immemorial grant or prescription as to common of fishery (y).

Wreck, &c.

The right of taking goods wrecked, royal fish, and swans may all be vested in subjects as royal franchises, for which see further, post, under that title.

Right of bathing in the sea.

The right of bathing in the sea has, after much discussion and deliberation, been determined (though not unanimously) not to be a common law right (z); and in all cases, if public decency is violated, it is an indictable offence.

II. Rivers.

106. A river is defined to be a running stream, pent in on either side with walls and banks, and it bears that name as well where the waters flow and reflow, as where they have their current one way. Definition.

Rivers are either public or private. A public river, otherwise called a navigable river, is where there is a common navigation exercised. A private river is where there is no public right of passage. Public or private.

1. Public Rivers.

An ancient river, which has been navigable from time immemorial, or which has been declared to be so by act of Parliament, is unquestionably a public navigable river (b); and prima facie a river which flows and reflows, and is an arm of the sea, is common to all (b); but in Lynn (Mayor &c.) v. Turner (c) this was not admitted, and the public right to navigate the stream was denied (d); however, in Miles v. Rose (e), the decision was in favour of the public right; but whether a river be navigable or not is a question of fact for a jury (f). What a navigable river.

107. The rights in public rivers are much the same as those enjoyed in the sea. As a rule, the soil of ancient navigable rivers, where there is a flux and reflux of the sea, belongs to the Crown (g); but the banks of such rivers, together with the trees, &c., belong to the owners of the adjacent grounds, although they cannot justify digging or casting them down (h), and it is the same with the sea-banks (i). The soil of other streams belongs to the subject, that is, to the owners of the adjacent grounds, to each re- Rights in rivers.

No common-spectively, as far as the middle of the stream; public rivers, therefore, so far as concerns the flowing and reflowing of the tide, and as they participate of the nature of the sea, are denominated royal streams, and so far as they are navigable by all her Majesty's subjects, they are properly considered as highways, with this difference, however, that if a way be foundeours and out of repair, the public have a right to go on the adjoining land, but if a river should happen to be choaked up with mud, this would not give the public a right to cut another passage through the adjoining lands (k). On this principle it has been decided, in more than one case, that there is no common-law right to towing-paths on the banks of navigable rivers, and that the right can be claimed only by custom (l), although in R. v. Cloworth (Inhab.) (m) it is said that if one have land adjoining on a navigable river, every one that uses that river has, if occasion be, a right to a way by the brink of the water over that land, or farther in if necessary.

On the same principle, no port, wharf, or quay can be erected without the licence or charter of the Queen, nor is there any general right to unload merchandize on the shore of the sea or the banks of the rivers; so, not to stake nets, nor to take away sand or stone (n). But these rights may belong to the subject by grant or prescription, and the right of the Corporation of London to drive piles into the bed of the river Thames was vindicated on this ground (o); so, on the same ground the Trinity House may take gravel and sand (p).

Rights of the Crown.

So, the queen possesses certain rights in rivers as that no one should set up a ferry without prescription or a charter, unless it be for the use of his own family; also a right to bar fishing or fowling for a certain time (q); and also a jurisdiction to remove nuisances by a commission of sewers (r).

The law respecting lands derelict by the recess of the sea applies also to navigable rivers; if a stream deprive a man of his ground by making a channel, and it afterwards return to its ancient course, the original ownership will not be lost if it can be ascertained (s); and the same in regard to alluvion; but it is said that if the field of a man becomes detached by the force of the stream, and attaches itself to the soil of another, and remains so a sufficient time for trees to grow thereon, the trees shall be the property of the latter, on the principle that trees belong to the person in whose land they are first planted (t); yet it seems that by custom a river may form the boundary of lands, whatever course it may take, as in the Case of the Severn below Gloucester (x).

Derelict lands,

As to eyots or small islands in rivers the rule of law seems to be, that if it rise in the middle of a river, it belongs to the owners of the land on either side, according to its breadth near the banks (y), and therefore if it lies nearer to one bank than the other, so much more will belong to the owner near to whose bank it lies than to the other (z). the name of a watercourse, and some other easements connected with water, of which see further, post, § 398.

Among the incidents to private rivers in common with navigable rivers, are fisheries, tolls, and rateability, &c.

A fishery is either a liberty or right of fishing arising by reason of the proprietary of the soil, as a man's right to fish in his own water, which is incident to his enjoyment of the land covered with water (b), or it is a liberty without the soil or severed from the land, of which there are different kinds, as—1. Common fishery, a right of fishing common to all, as a fishery in the sea; 2. Free fishery, or an exclusive right to fish in any public water, as in an arm of the sea; 3. Several fishery, a right to fish in a private water, either exclusively or in conjunction with the owner of the soil; 4. Common of piscary, or a liberty for one or more to fish in the water of another.

Although these distinctions are recognised in the books, yet the terms "common," "free," and "several" seem to be applied indiscriminately to fisheries either in public or private waters (c).

Common
fishery.

A common fishery, as above defined, is that which properly belongs to the sea and navigable rivers, it being a settled rule of law, that the sea and all navigable rivers are open to all her Majesty's subjects for the purpose of fishing (d); and there can be no prescription for a right to fish in the sea as annexed to certain tenements (e); but there may be a right either by grants from the Crown, or by statutory provisions, for which see Dig. P. L. tit. FISH, FISHERIES.

Free fishery.

A free fishery, according to the above definition (g), is like a free warren a royal franchise (h).

Several fishery.

But as to what is to be understood by a several fishery

the books are by no means agreed, and it is said to be a point not yet quite settled (i). Lord Coke says, "A man may prescribe to have separalem piscariam in such a water, and the owner of the soil shall not fish there, but if he claim to have communiam piscariæ or liberam piscariam, the owner of the soil shall fish there" (k). On the other hand, in Kemp v. Smith (l), it is said that he who has a several fishery is owner of the soil, and therefore it is a good plea in an action brought by him, that it is liberam piscariam. In Seymour v. Ld. Courtenay (m), it was ruled that a grant of fishery, with the exception of oysters, and a reservation of a right to take fish for the grantor's own table constituted a several fishery; and in this case the Court declined giving any opinion on the point, whether ownership of the soil be essential to a several fishery or otherwise; and it was added, "that a partial independent right, or a limited liberty, not derogating from the right of another, is not inconsistent with a several fishery; and therefore, although a man has the liberty of taking a particular species of fish or a certain quantity of fish, yet another having the liberty of taking fish at all times and for all purposes should still be deemed to have a several fishery (n); but it has in a subsequent case been held that where a man has a several fishery, the presumption is that he has the soil, and that presumption is conclusive, if not opposed (n).

Although, primâ facie, every subject has a right to take fish upon the sea-shore between the high and low water-mark, such general right may be abridged by the existence of an exclusive right in some individual (o), and the Crown may grant a several fishery in a navigable river, or in an arm of the sea (p), see further, post, § 629. either reservations by the owner of the soil, or limited grants by him, such as weirs, &c., in certain rivers (q); and where a person has a right, under ancient deeds, to have a weir across a river for taking fish, if it appear that such weir was heretofore made of brushwood, through which the fish might escape into the upper part of the river, he cannot convert it into a stone weir, whereby the possibility of escape, except in times of extraordinary flood, is debarred (r). So, it has been held that if one have a piscary in any water, he has no power to land without the assent of the owner of the freehold, Ipswich (Inhabs.) v. Browne (s); and in this case it was laid down that in every ferry the land on both sides ought to be long to the owners of the ferry, who otherwise could not land on the other side; but this latter point has been since overruled (t), and it seems also, that evidence of an enjoyment of a landing-place for the space of twenty years, by one having a fishery, is sufficient to presume a grant (x); and it has been said that those who are fishers in the sea may justify going on the adjoining land, for such fishery is for the commonwealth (y); but this is denied in Ball v. Herbert (z).

fishery.

A mere right of fishery, without the ownership or occupation of the soil, being an incorporeal hereditament, is not within the 43 El. as the subject of a rate (a); but a several fishery when shewn to be identified with the land is liable to be rated (b).

109. As a rule the sea and navigable rivers are not subject to toll, because by Magna Charta and other statutes every one has a right to go and come upon the sea without impediment (d); and therefore no duty can be imposed, in respect of the user of such waters, without the licence of the Crown. So that, although a man may have trespass for unloading on his grounds, yet he may not take anything as a certain common toll (e), unless a consideration be shewn, as coming into a quay or wharf &c., when a toll may be demandable (g); for toll-thorough, whether on the land or on the water, is against common right, and cannot be supported without a consideration (h); but toll-traverse, which applies to private waters, may be demanded, because it in itself supposes a consideration (i); therefore a custom of demanding a toll for the repair of a port has been held good, for the making a port is a consideration (k). So, a toll for weighage has been supported, where the party had also the liberty of bringing the goods into a port (l); and the owner of a port may have a toll by prescription, without alleging any consideration (m); so, for the same reason, a toll for measurage has been supported (n); so, for quayage (o); so, for wharfage (p).

Tolls, when demandable or otherwise.

The law of toll-thorough, as above laid down in respect of ports and harbours of the sea (see supra), applies also to navigable rivers, where the toll cannot be supported without shewing a consideration, Haspurt v. Wills (q), Notting-

Boston (Corpor.)* (s), the consideration of repairing a bridge was held sufficient; and in Steinson v. Heath (t), which was a case of toll-traverse, it was held that no consideration need be shewn (u).

Tolls in respect of ancient water-mills.

The taking of toll in respect of ancient water-mills rests on custom, and if more toll be taken than what the custom warrants, the miller is punishable for extortion (x).

Tolls are not per se rateable to the poor, yet when connected with land they are so (y). See further Dig. P. iii. tit. POOR. As to tolls imposed by Parliament, the amount and mode of imposition is regulated by the Act.

III. Canals, Docks &c.

Property in the soil.

110. Canals, docks and other artificial waters erected under the sanction of the legislature are regulated in every respect by the provisions of the Act in each particular case, see Dig. P. III. tit. RAILROADS AND CANALS; but the power thus given by the Act does not necessarily give the undertakers any interest in the soil, except of such land as they purchase; therefore the trustees of navigable rivers are held not to be rateable as the occupiers of land over which such rivers pass, although they are authorized to cleanse and enlarge the bed of the stream and to remove all obstructions to the navigation, they having no more than an easement in the river, which is an incorporeal hereditament, and no interest in the soil (z); and the grant of a navigation passes only an easement (a); so, where by a reservation in a

IV. Ponds, Detonys, and other Private Waters.

111. Private waters have also certain rights attached to them, particularly as regards fish, wild fowl and mills. Any man may erect a fishpond, or water wherein fish are kept and maintained, it being a matter of profit and increase of victuals (d); and there needs no privilege as for making a free warren (e); but the lord of a manor may not make such a store-place for fish, as thereby to disturb the commonable rights of the commoner (f).

Fish-ponds.

A man's storepond is his several piscary, and he may claim the fish as pisces suos (g). So, fish in a pond go to the heir and not to the executor (h); and a man may have Stealing fish.

By the Larceny Act unlawfully taking fish in any water, running through grounds which belong to a dwelling-house, is declared a misdemeanour; taking fish in other waters is made punishable with a fine of £5, and the tackle of persons unlawfully angling may be seized. See Dig. P. I. tit. LARCENY. Stealing oysters from an oyster-bed is by the same act declared a larceny; and dredging for oysters in an oyster fishery is made punishable by a fine of £20.

fish-ponds.

By the Malicious Injuries Act breaking down or otherwise destroying the dam of any fishpond, or of any water which is private property or in which there is any private right of fishery with intent to destroy the fish, or putting any lime or noxious material therein with the like intent, is declared a misdemeanour punishable with transportation for seven years or imprisonment for two years. See Dig. P. I. tit. MALICIOUS INJURIES.

Decoys, how protected.

112. Ponds for the breeding and maintenance of wild fowl, which are called decoys, are under the special protection of the law, therefore the owner of such a decoy may have an action against any one shooting at, disturbing, or scaring the birds (l), see further Dig. P. III. tit. GAME.

Mills.

Water-mills like other mills are corporeal hereditaments, (see ante § 93); and a covenant by a lessee to repair a mill has been held to run with the land (m). With water-mills is essentially connected the law respecting water-courses, which being an incorporeal hereditament will be considered

V. Sewers.

113. A sewer is properly a trench artificially made to carry water into the sea, but a commission of sewers comprehends in it much more than what was originally understood by the term. The protection of the land against inundations, which is the object of such commissions, was deemed a matter of great importance at an early period, although the first statute on the subject did not pass before the reign of Hen. IV.; it was, however, followed by many other statutes in subsequent reigns, see Dig. P. III. tit. SEWER.

Definition of a sewer.

Commissions of sewers.

The commissioners of sewers have jurisdiction over a sewer communicating with a navigable stream, or with the sea above the point where the tide ebbs, if it be useful for navigation, and if the place over which the jurisdiction is to be exercised is likely to be benefited by it (n); so, their jurisdiction extends over sea-walls and banks, as also the banks and walls of navigable and other rivers that have their course to the sea; so, they have power over gutters, ditches, ponds, pools, sewers and streams, so far as they are for the benefit of the commonwealth, but such as are fences for private grounds only, are not properly within the commission (o).

Easement, what it is.

What is an incorporeal hereditament. § 115. An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal), or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within the same (a). It may be a right issuing out of the land or other thing belonging to the owner, which is said to be in render, as rent, toll or other franchise, or it may issue out of the land or other thing belonging to another, as common &c., when it is said to be in prender (b).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

In render.

In prender.

These latter rights may again be distinguished into rights coupled with a profit which are called profits à prendre, or rights without any profit which are called easements. A right to take something out of the soil of another is a profit à prendre, as the right of common, and also some minor rights as a right to take drifted sand, or a liberty to fish, fowl, hunt, hawk, &c., see Dig. P. III. tit. PRESCRIPTION, also further, post, § 498.

Profit à prendre.

An easement is a privilege without a profit, as a right of way, and rights connected with water, (see ante, § 398), light and air, (see further, post, § 444, et seq.), besides some other particular rights of this kind, as a right to support from a neighbouring wall (c). Such rights may be further distinguished into easements to be exercised on the land of another, as to pass over his land; or such as prevent a person from using his own land to the prejudice of his neighbour's easement, as where he may not dig away the support which his neighbour has a right to for the upholding his houses or land (d). As to the rights connected with trees growing on adjoining lands see ante, § 96.

Easement,
what it is.

Different kinds.

Incorporeal hereditaments not being visible property, capable of actual corporeal occupation, are held not to be within the 43 El. for the relief of the poor, and consequently not rateable, (see Dig. P. III. tit. POOR); and the same law is made applicable by 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 50, to the highway rates (Ib. tit. HIGHWAYS); but the rule is not extended to the sewers rate. (See ante, § 114).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

Appendancy and appurtenancy.

What necessary to make appendancy or appurtenancy.

§ 116. To incorporeal hereditaments are incident appendancy and appurtenancy. A thing appendant is that, which beyond memory has belonged to another thing more worthy; appendants are therefore ever by prescription; but a thing appurtenant may be created at this day, as if a man at this day grant to another and his heirs common in such a moor for his beasts levant and couchant; or if he grant to another common of estover or turbary in fee-simple, to be burnt or spent within the manor; by these grants these commons are appurtenant to the manor, and shall pass with the grant thereof^(e); and if a thing which may be appendant or appurtenant, had always passed with the manor to which it belonged by the words cum pertinentiis, it must be taken to be appendant^(f). But to make a thing appendant or appurtenant it must agree in quality and nature with the thing whereunto it is appendant or appurtenant, as a thing corporeal cannot properly be appendant to a thing corporeal, nor a thing incorporeal to a thing incorporeal, but things incorporeal which lie in grant, as advowsons, commons and the like, may be appendant to things corporeal, as a manor, house, or lands; or things corporeal to things incorporeal, as lands to an office, but as they must agree in nature and quality common of turbary or estovers cannot be appendant or appurtenant to land, but to a house to be spent there^(g); so, a leet that is temporal cannot be appendant to a church or chapel^(h); so, a seat in a church cannot be claimed by prescription as appendant to land, but to a house; for that the seat belongs to the house in respect of the inhabitancy thereof; and therefore although the house be part of a manor, yet, in that case, the seat may be claimed as appendant to the house⁽ⁱ⁾.

Another requisite to make a thing appendant or appurtenant is that the principal or superior thing must be of perpetual subsistence, therefore if an advowson be appendant to a manor, it is in truth appendant to the demesnes of a manor which are of perpetual subsistence, and not to rents or services. As a rule, if a thing appendant be once severed, it shall never afterwards be appendant (k); but to this rule there are exceptions, see infra, § 118.

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

The rule that things incorporeal cannot be appendant or appurtenant to things incorporeal admits of some exceptions, for return of writs or a leet may be appurtenant to a hundred; so may waif and stray be appurtenant to a leet, and yet these things are both incorporeal (l), and it seems rather to depend upon whether the things are capable of union without any incongruity (m).

Exceptions to the rule.

The principal incorporeal hereditaments entitled to distinct consideration are—1. Advowsons; 2. Tithes; 3. Rents; 4. Annuities; 5. Right of Common; 6. Right of Way; 7. Right to Water and Watercourses; 8. Right to Light and Air; 9. Right to Pews and other Easements; 10. Offices; 11. Dignities; 12. Franchises.

§ 117. An advowson may be considered as to—1. The nature of an advowson in general; 2. The different kinds of advowsons; 3. Presentation; 4. Grant of an advowson; 5. Appropriation and impropriation; 6. Incidents to an advowson; 7. How an advowson may be lost or suspended, (see post, TITLE TO THINGS REAL); 8. Injuries affecting an advowson, (see post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL).

I. Nature of an Advowson in general.

An advowson is a right of patronage to a church or benefice; the person to whom the right of presentation belongs is called the patron, originally the advocatus, because the founder of every church was also the maintainer and protector thereof, and advocatio signified not only the superintending care bestowed on all the temporal concerns of the church, but also the right which flowed out of the same, whence is derived the word "advowson." The rights and interests of the patron are recognised as well in the Statute as in the Common Law, and accordingly the consent of the patron is required on many occasions, as by the 17 G. 3, c. 53, for mortgaging the glebe &c., in order to provide a residence for the incumbent; by the 42 G. 3, c. 116, as to the redemption of the land-tax by the incumbent; by the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 30, as to the exchange of common fields, where the incumbent is interested; by the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 115, as to the inclosure of common fields; and also by the Church Building Act, see Dig. P. I. II. tit. BENEFICES, CHURCHES, COMMONS, EXCHANGES.

In gross.

118. An advowson may either be appendant or in gross, see ante, § 116. An advowson is said to be appendant to a manor, when it has been so annexed to it as to be parcel thereto and passed by a grant of the manor cum pertinentiis (n); but when the property of the advowson is separated from the manor or other thing it is said to be in gross (o).

It may be made in gross three several ways, as if a man grant a manor without the advowson; or the advowson itself be conveyed away; or if the owner of an advowson presents to it, as if it were in gross (p).

An advowson may be appendant to so many acres of land, or to one acre (q); or the advowson of a vicarage may be appendant to a rectory (r); so, an advowson may be appendant for a part, and in gross for another part (s); and although as a rule an advowson once severed cannot be again appendant, yet an advowson may be appendant for one turn and in gross for the other (t); and if co-parceners make partition of a manor and the advowson is allotted to one, then it becomes in gross; but if the co-parcener to whom it was allotted dies without issue, and without disposing of the advowson, it will go to the other sister, and again become appendant (u); so an advowson may become again appendant, when the act which made it in gross was avoided, as where an advowson was mortgaged, whereby it became in gross, and it was afterwards redeemed, then it became again appendant (v); so, on a recovery after a usurpation (w); so, if it be excepted out of a lease for life of a manor, it becomes in gross during the continuance of the lease, but upon its expiration it becomes again appendant (x).

II. Different kinds of Advowsons.

119. An advowson is either presentative, collative or donative. An advowson presentative is when the patron presents the parson to the ordinary to be instituted and inducted in the church (y), as to presentation see infra, § 120.

Advowsons.
Presentative.

An advowson collative is that which is given absolutely by the bishop. Collation is, in the case of a bishop where he has the sole right, what institution is in the case of an advowson presentative. No possession is gained by a collation against the Queen (z).

Collative.

An advowson donative is where the patron puts the clerk in possession without any presentation to the ordinary, such livings being privileged and exempt from the jurisdiction of the bishop, and visitable by the patron only (a). In this case, the party is in full possession immediately on his nomination, and may maintain an action for money had and received against any person who takes the profits (b).

Donative.

If the patron of a donative once present to the ordinary, and his clerk is admitted and instituted, it is said that the advowson is now become presentative, and shall never be after donative, 1 Inst. x. 344. a., sed contra Ladd v. Widdows, 2 Salk. 541; where it was held, that though a presentation might destroy an impropriation, it could not destroy a donative, because the creation thereof was by letters patent. As to donatives under 1 G. 1, c. 10, see Dig. P. II. tit. BENEFICE, CHURCH.

III. Presentation.

120. A right of patronage is principally exercised by the act of presenting a clerk. This subject may therefore be considered under the following heads:—1. Wherein it consists; 2. How and when to be made; 3. By whom to be made; 4. Incidents to presentation; 5. When it may be revoked; 6. When void or voidable.

1. Wherein Presentation consists.

Presentation distinguished from nomination.

Presentation is a known term in law, and signifies the offering a clerk to the bishop to be admitted and instituted. It is distinguished from nomination, which is the offering a clerk to the patron; and these two things may be in different persons, thus trustees may have the right of presentation, and the cestui que trust must nominate (c); so, the mortgagee has the right to nominate (d); so, a person may grant to another and his heirs, that whenever the church becomes vacant he will present such person as grantee may nominate, "and this is a good grant" (e); and the nomination is the effect of the advowson, and he who has it is the patron; and the person who is to present is the subject or servant to execute (f); but where the nomination and presentation is in different persons, the presentor is to judge of the qualifications of the nominee in the same manner as the bishop does (g).

By the 6 G. 4, c. 16, the assignees of a bankrupt, and by the 1 & 2 V. c. 110, the assignees of an insolvent must present the person nominated by the bankrupt and insolvent. See Dig. P. II. III. tit. BANKRUPT AND INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

Appointment of curates.

Curates to chapels of ease.

The appointment of a curate to officiate under an incumbent in his own church, must be by such incumbent's nomination of him to the bishop (h). The appointment of a curate to a chapel of ease belongs properly to the incumbent of the mother church, who being instituted to the cure of souls

See Dig. P. l. II. tit. AUGMENTATION, BENEFICE. But by agreement of the bishop, patron and incumbent the inhabitants may have a right to elect and nominate a curate (k); if there be an agreement it must be by deed (l); but there may be a prescription, in which every thing is presumed to be proper (l).

2. How and within what Time to be made.

121. Presentation must be to a void benefice (m); but there may be a presentation to a deanery, archdeaconry, or prebend (n), though not to a donative, see ante, § 119.

Before the Statute of Frauds a presentation might be made by parol, and if it were by writing it was not necessary to be by deed, being in the nature of a letter of recommendation of the clerk to the bishop (o); but now if it be a common person he must shew how the presentation is made, for a presentation conveys an interest in lands and tenements (p); so, it is said that the queen may present by parol if the bishop be present (p); the usual way however is to make a presentation by instrument under the Great Seal (q).

Must be by deed.

Regularly the presentation by the queen ought to shew by what title she presents, for if she mistake her title, as if she presents ratione lapsus, when she is very patron, she is deceived, and her presentation is void (r); otherwise if she present generally, without saying by what title (s).

3. By whom to be made.

By the very patron.

122. A presentation ought regularly to be made by the very patron, and if not, the nominee of the patron must be presented, see ante, § 120. By common right, the parson, and not the patron of the parsonage, shall be the patron of the vicarage(b); so, by common right, the bishop is patron of all his prebends(c). As to who may present, it will be necessary to consider presentation by guardian or infant, feme covert or husband, heir or executor, co-parcener or tenants in common, tenant in dower, and papists; by lapse, and by the queen.

Guardian or infant.

Guardian by nurture or socage of a manor whereunto an advowson is appendant shall not present to a church, because he can take nothing for the presentation for which he may account to the heir, and therefore the heir, although an infant, shall present(d).

Feme covert.

A feme covert cannot present alone, but the presentation must be by husband and wife(e); and although the right of patronage descends to the heir of the wife, yet the right of presenting during life belongs to the husband, who is tenant by the curtesy (f), see further infra, as to co-parceners.

INCORPORAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

As to when the heir and when the executor may present, see ante, § 9. Heir, executor.

If co-parceners agree, they are to join in the act of presentation, otherwise the eldest shall have the preference, and afterwards the rest in turns (g), the Court will direct them to draw lots, who shall have the first presentation (h); but when the right is in joint tenants or tenants in common, and there is no composition in writing to present by turns, they must of necessity join in the presentation, for if they present singly, the bishop may refuse the clerk (i).

&c.

A composition to present in turn may be either by record, or deed or parol. A composition by parol however can only be between privies in blood (k); between strangers it must be by deed (k). Where an advowson is held in common, and the rota of presentation is not expressly settled, the first and peaceable presentations are evidence of composition between the parties (l); and prerogative presentations are not turns to deprive a patron of his turn (l).

Composition to present in turn.

If two sisters, co-parceners, present jointly, then marry and settle their estates and die; the husband of the eldest, tenant by the curtesy, shall present first, as assignee, for the grantees of parceners have the same privileges as parceners themselves (m); so, if two parceners assign their part of an advowson severally (n). If a man seised of an advowson die, leaving a widow, the heir shall have two presentations, and the widow the third as her dower, and she may recover the same in an action, or it may be assigned to her (p).

Corporation.

When a corporation presents, it must be under their common seal, and by the true name of their corporation (q).

Papists.

Papists are by several statutes prevented from presenting to benefices, see Dig. P. I. tit. PAPISTS.

Presentation by lapse.

If a patron does not present within six months after avoidance, the church lapses to the bishop (r); and it will incur, from the time of institution into a second benefice, against the patron, if notice be given him, otherwise not (s); and the lapse occurs, although the patron be an infant (t).

If the bishop does not present, the church lapses to the archbishop (u); if the archbishop does not present, then it lapses to the queen; or to her successor (v); and no lapse incurs where the queen is patron, although she does not present within the six months; but if the queen does not present, the ordinary may have the church served (x); so, after a lapse, if the patron presents before the bishop or archbishop collates, his clerk shall be instituted (y); so, after a lapse to the queen, if she do not take advantage thereof (z) and sequester the profits (a).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-MENTS.Presentation by the queen.

The queen is patron paramount of all the benefices in England, in virtue of which, the care of filling all such churches as are not regularly filled, devolves to the Crown (b). If the queen be seised of an advowson, in which the church exceeds the value of 20 marks, she herself shall present (c); but to a church of the Crown, under that value, the chancellor shall present (c).

If an archbishop or bishop dies, and while the temporalities are in the queen's hands a church in his patronage becomes vacant, she shall present (d); so, if the incumbent be created a bishop, by which a church becomes void, though a subject be patron, the queen shall present (e); but when the incumbent of a donative is made a bishop she shall not present (f).

If a person be outlawed the queen shall present, but if the outlawry be reversed, then the patron shall present (g); so, if the queen do not present on the next avoidance, she shall not present afterwards (h); but if her clerk dies before induction, she shall present de novo (i); and this prerogative takes away the right of none, only postpones the right; therefore the royal prerogative of presenting to a church, vacant by the incumbent being promoted to a bishopric, does not destroy the effect of a prior grant of the next presentation by the owner of the advowson (k).

So, where one has the nomination and another the presentation, if such right of presentation accrues to the queen, this shall not be to the prejudice of him that has the nomination, but he may still nominate to the chancellor; and if the queen presents without any such nomination, the nominator shall bring his suit against the incumbent only, because the queen cannot be termed a usurper (l).

4. Incidents to Presentation.

123. The ceremonies connected with presentation are admission, institution, and induction.

Admission.

Admission, in its ordinary and limited sense, is taken for the act of the bishop, who, on approval of the presentee, after examination, declares him fit to serve the cure of the church, to which he is presented by the words admitto te habilem (m).

Institution.

Institution is a conveyance or commitment of the cure of souls from the bishop to the incumbent by the words Instituo te ad tale beneficium, habere curam animarum, et accipe curam tuam et meam (n). The bishop may institute under the episcopal or any other seal, as well out of his diocese as within it; for the matter is not local, but follows the person wherever the bishop goes (o).

By admission and institution a church is full against a common person, but not against the queen before induction (p); so there is no seisin or possession of the church before induction (p); but an incumbent, even on a wrongful presentation, who remains six months in possession after institution, cannot be removed (q). A church being full by institution, if a second institution is granted to the same church, this is called a superinstitution, which is triable in the Ecclesiastical Court before induction (q). When the ordinary is also the patron and confers the living, presentation and institution are one and the same thing (r). As to the remedy in case the ordinary refuses institution, see post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL.

Induction.

Induction is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice or the corporeal seisin, as institution is of the spiritual, and the clerk is not complete incumbent until such corporeal possession; and no lapse incurs from the time of the institution, but from the time of the induction, for it is the induction into a second benefice that vacates the first, and not the institution to it (s); so, if a bishop makes admission and institution to his clerk, and dies, and the temporalities come into the queen's hands before induction, the queen shall have the presentation (t). Without induction, the clerk is not parson, for by this he becomes seised of the temporalities of the church, so as to have power to grant them or sue for them, and on this account it is compared to livery and seisin, by which possession is given to temporal estates; and what induction works in parochial cures is effected by installation into dignities, prebends and the like, in cathedral churches (u).

Induction is an act of a temporal nature and on that account cognisable only in the temporal courts (x). But see further, post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL; as to the requisites after induction, see Dig. P. II. tit. CLERGY.

5. When Presentation may be revoked.

124. The queen may revoke her presentation at any time before induction, notwithstanding letters obtained for admission, institution and induction (y); so, there may be a revocation in law as in fact, as where the presentee of the queen dies before induction, this is a revocation in law (z); so, where the queen presents her clerk, and dies before he is admitted (a); so, if the chancellor presents to a benefice, supposing it to be under value and the queen being ap- By the queen.

prized of it, repeals the presentation, and presents one in her own name, this is a good repeal, because the queen has a right precedent (b).

It was formerly thought that none but the queen could revoke (c), but the contrary appears to be now the settled doctrine (d).

6. When void or voidable.

126. The clerk of a co-parcener being once complete incumbent, the turn is served, although he is afterwards deprived; thus where the institution is voidable by sentence declaratory, as the church is full until the sentence is declared, the turn is gone (e). But if, after presentation, institution, and induction, the church remains actually void, as where the presentee does not read the articles, there the turn is not served, but the presentor may present again without sentence of deprivation (f). As to Title to Things Real and Injuries to Things Real, see further, post, under those titles.

1. How it passes.

2. Grant of the next Avoidance.

127. As the right of patronage in an advowson may pass by the grant of the patron, so the right of presenting to an avoidance or any number of avoidances may be the subject of a grant (p); but an actual vacancy cannot be granted (q); therefore if an advowson be sold during a vacancy, the next presentation does not pass (r), although the grant of the advowson itself is valid (s); so, if a presentation be made by usurpation, and the benefice be sold in the mean time, the case is the same because the church was never full of that clerk, and that would be an evasion of the law (t); so, it seems to be the general opinion that if a person purchases the next avoidance with intent to present a particular person, and the church becomes void and the party is presented, this is simony (u); and if the church be purchased with intent to present a son, it appears that it makes no difference (x). Where, however, a church is void and a grant of the next avoidance is made, the grant will pass a future avoidance, although not the next immediate presentation (y); so, if two persons possess the grant of the next avoidance, and after the church has become void, one of them relinquish his right to the other, nothing will pass by the release, and they must both join in the presentation as before (z); sed secus if the release had been before the avoidance (a).

If a person grants the next presentation to one, and afterwards grants the next presentation to a second, the second grant is void, and the grantee shall not have the second presentation (b); unless the first grantee presents on a simoniacal contract, and the queen afterwards presents on her title of simony, then the second grantee may present when the church is void of the queen's incumbent (c).

A next avoidance being but a chattel interest, the grant must be to the grantee and his executors, but if it be to the grantee and his heirs the executors will have it (d); this is however to be understood of presentative benefices, for in a donative such void turn descends to the heir (e).

3. Grant by the Crown.

128. Grants by the Crown differ from those by the subject in two particulars:—First, the grant of a manor by a subject passes an advowson that is appendant, see ante, § 126; but it is otherwise in the case of royal grants, where an advowson will not pass except it be expressly named, and that by virtue of the Statute de Prærogativa regis, see Dig. P. II. tit. ADVOWSON; and so it has been adjudged in several cases (f); but some cases have been deemed not within the reason of the statute, such as the Crown's restitution of lands to the heirs of idiots, or of the temporalities of bishops (g); so, words of reference have been deemed sufficient as when the king granted a manor with all its appurtenances, as the same came to or were possessed by the Crown (h).

Difference between grants by the Crown and by a subject.

In the case of an advowson appendant.

In the next place, although the grant by a subject of a void turn is void, yet such grant by the Crown is good (i); but if during the avoidance the queen grant a manor to which an advowson is appendant, with all advowsons appendant thereto, the void turn will not pass by these words (k). A right of presentation however, accruing to the queen by lapse is not grantable either before or after its fall (l); where therefore the queen has two titles to the same church, one as patron and the other by lapse, and she grant the advowson generally, the grantee will not be entitled to the void presentation (m).

V. Appropriation and Impropriation.

1. Appropriation.

Definition.

§ 129. Appropriation of an advowson was, when the church, with the tithes, glebe, &c., was appropriated to the perpetual use of some corporation, religious or ecclesiastical, regularly it was made to a sole corporation which performed divine service (n); but sometimes to a dean and chapter (o). In all cases the sufficient endowment of a vicar was a necessary condition of appropriating a benefice, and without such an endowment the appropriation was not good (p). Where the vicarage is not endowed the impropiator of the small tithes is bound to maintain a priest, and upon information by the Attorney-General, the Queen may assign such allowance as she thinks proper (q). Such a minister is called a perpetual curate; between whom and a vicar there is this difference, that the latter is in for life, and the former, as it is said, at will only (r). A vicar is usually endowed, but a curate never (s), except since Queen Anne's Bounty, (see Dig. P. 1. tit. AUGMENTATION); so, where there is a curate the parson is incumbent, but where there is a vicar, the vicar is incumbent (t).

Vicar and perpetual curate.Vicarage by endowment.

A vicarage by endowment becomes a benefice distinct from the parsonage; and as a vicar is now enabled to recover his temporal rights without the aid of parson or patron, so he has the whole cure of souls transferred to him by the institution of the bishop (u). The parson, by making the endowment, acquires the patronage of the vicarage, and if the parson makes a lease of the parsonage without reserving

There were no vicarages at common law, and therefore no tithes or profits do de jure belong to the vicar only by endowment or prescription (y).

An advowson will be disappropriated, if the body to which it is annexed is dissolved (x); so, if a presentation be made to the church, it becomes ever after presentable (a).

Disappropriation.

2. Impropriation.

130. Although appropriations were regularly made to spiritual persons only, yet many grants of parsonages were made by the Crown to laymen, particularly in the reign of Hen. 8, and that which was an appropriation in the hands of spiritual persons is usually and properly called an impropriation in the hands of a layman; and by the statutes for dissolving religious houses the rectory tithes, &c. impropriate come to the hands of lay persons are temporal inheritances (b), transferable as any other species of property, and for which the same actions may be brought (c).

Appropriation
and impropriation distinguished.

Before the Reformation, if the benefice was given ad mensam monachorum and so not appropriated in the common form, but granted by way of union pleno jure, in that case it was served by a temporary or stipendiary curate, belonging to their own house, and sent out as occasion required; but when such appropriations with the charge of providing for the cure were transferred (after the dissolution of the religious houses) from spiritual societies to lay individuals, who were not capable of serving them by themselves, they were consequently obliged to nominate some particular person to the ordinary for his licence to serve the cure: which gave

As to the union of churches, see Dig. P. II. tit. CHURCHES.

VI. Incidents to an Advowson.

131. The most important incidents to an advowson are what regards estates in an advowson, and conveyances of such estates.

Advowson a valuable thing.

An advowson or the general right of presentation was held to be a valuable thing which might be sold and its annual value estimated (f); but the exercise of this right is deemed a matter of trust (g), and therefore an advowson will not pass under the name of "commodities, emoluments, profits, and advantages (h);" and on the same principle the next immediate presentation cannot be sold (i); and on the same principle bonds given to resign any benefice upon the request of the patron, whether general or special, were held invalid, until the 9 G. 4, c. 94, made special bonds of resignation in favour of a son or other near relative valid under particular restrictions (j); so, on the same principle, of an advowson, wherein a man has an absolute ownership, as he has in lands and rents, he shall not plead that he is seised in his demesne as of fee, because that inheritance, savouring not de domo, cannot serve for the sustentation of him or his

P. III. tit. GUARDIAN AND INFANT.

An advowson being an incorporeal hereditament presentation to a church is the only seisin.

A person may have the same estate in an advowson, both in respect of quality and quantity, as in any other real possession; so, there may be an equitable owner of an advowson, as cestui que trust, or purchaser before conveyance, but the trustee or mortgagee will have the bare right of presentation and not of nomination (o).

Estates in an advowson.

There may be curtesy of an advowson, but before the late Dower Act, (see Dig. P. II. tit. DOWER), if the advowson were appendant, and the wife died before entry into the manor, the husband could not present because he had no seisin (p); but it seems to have been otherwise where the advowson was in gross (q).

Curtsey.

There may also be a tenant in dower of an advowson; and if a widow is endowed of a third part of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, the third part of the advowson shall pass therewith (r); and if the estate of the husband consists of three manors appendant, the common-law right of dower is as it seems the third presentation to each advowson (s). If the advowson be in gross, the assignment of dower must be of the third presentation (t).

But in donatives the right of donation descends to the heir-at-law, where a vacancy has occurred in the lifetime of the ancestor, because there is no lapse in donatives, and the executor has no title, as he would have in presentative advowsons (y).

So, an advowson was held to be assets by descent, and, before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 104, making all real property assets for the payment of debts, was adjudged to be such and ordered to be sold for that purpose (z).

Conveyance of an advowson.

132. An advowson in gross may be transferred by every species of conveyance applicable to the transfer of real incorporeal property, according to the nature of the owner's estate therein (a). There are, however, some diversities arising from the different kinds of advowsons, and the nature of the property in them. As an advowson must pass by grant, a conveyance by the deed of the tenant in tail would not before the 7 & 8 V. c. 76 (b), have worked a discontinuance, therefore if tenant in tail of a manor, whereunto an advowson was appendant, made a feoffment, with or without deed, of one acre with the advowson, and the church became void and the feoffee presented, and then the tenant in tail died, and the church became void, the issue should not present, until he had recontinued the acre, but if the feoffee had not executed the same by presentation then the issue in tail should have presented (c); and an advowson appendant underwent before the 6 & 7 V. c.

INCORPORAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

Again, a grantor can alien an advowson for so long a period only as his estate or interest continues therein, therefore if a tenant in tail or for life grants the next avoidance and dies before the avoidance takes place, the grant is void as against the issue in the one case (f), and as against the remainder-man in the other (g); and the case is the same although the heir of tenant in tail joins in the grant, it shall nevertheless be void as against him, because he had nothing in the advowson, either in possession or right, or actual possibility at the time of the grant (h); but where a grantor possessed of a term of years in a rectory, to which the advowson of a vicarage was appendant, granted the next avoidance and then died, it was held that the estate of the grantee was not defeasible by surrender of the term by the grantor's administrator, but that he should have the next avoidance, for otherwise the grantor would derogate from his own grant (i). Tithes are the tenths of the produce of the ground or of personal industry, and are distinguished into prædial, personal, or mixt, and again, according to their value, into great and small. Prædial tithes are such as arise immediately from the ground, as grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, and herba. Mixt tithes are such as do not arise immediately from the ground, but from things nourished by the ground, as calves, lambs, chickens, colts, milk, cheese, and eggs. Personal tithes are such as arise by the industry of man, being the tenth part of the clear gain after charges deducted; and these are in some places due by custom, and

Tithes are again distinguished, according to their value, into great and small: great tithes are tithes of wood, corn, or hay (n); so, formerly, other herbs planted in large quantities; but it seems now to be settled that tithes are great or small according to the nature of the things, and not according to the mode of cultivation, or the uses to which they are applied, therefore the tithe of beans and peas, whether sown in fields or gardens, are great tithes (o), and potatoes though sown in large quantities are small tithes (p).

ject to the customary modes of descent as to gavelkind or borough-English (x).

Tithes of which a man is seised in fee may be devised as hereditaments (y); but not under the word "lands" (z), unless the devise cannot be otherwise interpreted (a); but it seems not to be settled whether tithes would pass under a devise of a messuage and tenement, "and all the profits arising therefrom at D. in the parish of B." (b); but the word "tenements" in a private Act of Parliament includes tithes (c).

The Will Act, 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 26, includes tithes; (see Dig. P. III. tit. WILLS); and as it relates to all real property will necessarily extend to rent-charges substituted for tithes under the Tithe Commutation Acts.

Tithes are the only incorporeal hereditaments made liable to the poor-rates by the 43 EL. (See Dig. P. III. tit. POOR). So, a sum of money given under an Inclosure Act to a rector or vicar, in lieu of tithes, which are rateable, is equally rateable (d); and a vicar is liable to poor-rates for his tithe (e); so, they are liable to the payment of first fruits (f); but the common law relieves ecclesiastical persons from toll, murage, and pontage (g), though not, as it seems, from the sewers' rate (h). Tithes are expressly enumerated among the real property liable to the land-tax in 38 G. 3, c. 5.

135. Tithes of common right belong to the parson of that church within the precincts of whose parish they arise (i), the limits of which are to be ascertained by reputation (k), or by the unresisted claims of parochial authorities, or the perambulations whereof are generally made every year (l); but one person may prescribe to have tithes within the parish of another parish, which is called a portion of tithes (m); and this is so distinct from the rectory, that if the person having it purchases the rectory, the portion is not extinct, but remains grantable (n); and where a layman or portionist has been long in possession, courts of equity will not disturb the possession, but leave the rector to establish his right at law (o).

As between the parson and the vicar of a parish, all tithes to which the latter cannot prove a title by endowment or prescription belong to the parson (p); and as the tithes do not belong to the vicar de jure, endowment will not be presumed, but must be shewn on his part (q); but a

The tithes of assart lands in the grant of E. 1 should be confined to such lands as were then assarted or intended shortly so to be, and not be extended to such as should be so in future ages (z). If the queen grants them, her patentee shall have them (a); but by custom a parson or vicar may be entitled to the tithes of extra-parochial lands (b).

By the 2 & 3 E. 6, tithes of cattle depasturing in commons are made payable to the parson or vicar of the parish where the owner of the cattle lives; and by the 17 G. 2, c. 37, where waste lands formerly fens and marshes are drained, and the parish to which they belong cannot be ascertained, the tithes arising therefrom are due to the tithe-owner of the parish lying nearest to such lands.

By the 27 H. 8, c. 28, patentees of all manors, lands, tenements, tithes, pensions, and other hereditaments to whom such manors, &c. were granted, now called lay impropriators, were to enjoy the same according to the effect of the letters-patent, and were to have the same remedies and the same means of assurance as for temporal possessions; it was held therefore that the tithes of a rectory, which belonged to a dissolved abbey, are due to the grantee of the Crown, and not to the incumbent, as rector (e).

Mere non-payment of a particular tithe is no evidence against a lay rector of a conveyance of that tithe (f).

All persons generally ought to pay their tithes to whom they are due, for of common right all lands ought to pay tithe (g); and they were formerly payable by the occupier of the lands, or the lessee (h); but now by the Tithes Commutation Act, 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, the rent-charge, which is substituted for the tithes, is payable by the tenant in the first instance, under all leases made since 13 Aug. 1836, but he is allowed to deduct the same in account with his landlord. This must however be understood to take place in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, for the Act does not preclude the landlord and tenant from making any other terms upon the subject which they think proper. By another section of the Act a tenant at rack-rent is at liberty to dissent from the payment of the rent-charge, and in that

If the owner or lessee sold the crop of grass or corn, and the vendee cut it, he was to pay the tithe (i); but if the owner consumed his herbage, by agistment of the cattle of another, the owner of the cattle was not to pay the tithe (k). If a parson at common law had enfeoffed another of his glebe, the feoffee paid the tithes, for tithes were not extinguished by unity of possession (l); so, if the parson leased his glebe, the lessee was to pay the tithes (l); so, if a parson leased his rectory, he should pay tithes to his lessee for his other lands in the parish (m); but the effect of the Tithes Commutation Acts is, it is presumed, to make this now for the most part a matter of arrangement between the parties.

V. What Things are Titheable.

138. The law by which it has been heretofore determined what things were titheable or otherwise must, as soon as the Tithes Commutation Acts come fully into operation, cease to be applicable in practice, and therefore need not to be enlarged upon in this work. By the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, ss. 36, 37, the commissioners are empowered to ascertain the total value of tithes in any parish, in which no previous agreement has been made; and the value of the tithes is to be calculated (after making all just deductions on account of the expenses of collecting, preparing for sale, and marketing, when such tithes have been taken in kind) according to the average of seven years preceding Christmas in the year 1835, unless the tithes have been compounded for or demised, in which case the amount of such composition or the sum agreed to be paid instead of tithes is to be taken as the clear value.

In the case of hop-grounds, orchards, or gardens, the commissioners are directed by the Act to estimate the value of the tithes thereof according to the average rate of composition for the tithes of hops, fruit, and garden respectively during seven years preceding Christmas in the year 1835 within a district to be assigned in each case; and in the case of coppice-wood, the value of the tithes is to be estimated according to the average value of coppice-wood of the same kind cut during the period of seven years in that and the neighbouring parishes; in the case of inclosures, barren lands, glebe, and lands of any privileged orders, the value of the tithes is to be estimated according to the average value of lands of the like description and quality in that and the neighbouring parishes, estimating the same as chargeable to all parliamentary, parochial, county and other rates and charges and assessments, to which the said tithes are liable, and shall add the value so estimated to the value of the other tithes of the parish so ascertained as aforesaid. As soon as the commissioners have ascertained the total value of all the tithes in the parish they are directed by sect. 50 of the same Act to frame an award, declaring the sum ascertained to be the amount of the rent-charge to be paid in respect of the tithes of the parish; and by sections 33 and 53 valuers are directed to be appointed, whose duty it is to apportion the rent-charge to be paid among the several lands of the parish.

VI. Setting out and carrying away Tithes.

Old law.

139. Every person was bound before the Tithes Commutation Acts to set out the tithes of his own land, but the manner of doing it was for the most part governed by the custom of the place (n); yet if the owner would not cut his crop before it was spoiled the parson was without his remedy (o); and the parson, vicar, impropriator, or farmer could not come himself and set out the tithes without the licence and consent of the owner, and if he did, he would render himself liable to an action of trespass (p). As this part of the law of tithes will very shortly cease to be in operation, it is not necessary to add anything further on the subject.

(n) Hall v. Mackett, 4 Gwill. 1460.

(o) Godolph. 394.

VII. Exemptions from Tithes.

140. As a rule, one spiritual person does not pay tithes to another, as if a vicar be endowed of glebe and small tithes he shall not pay tithes of his glebe to the parson (q); so, a parson shall not pay tithe to the vicar for his glebe (r); so, if a vicar be endowed of small tithes generally, the parson shall not pay small tithes (s), unless the endowment was of tithe of glebe expressly, according to the maxim, ecclesia ecclesie decimas solvere non debet, but this maxim applies only as between rector and vicar of the same church (t); so, the lessee of the parson shall pay small tithe to the vicar (u); so, if the land comes to the parsonage after the endowment (v). A spiritual person may prescribe in non decimando (x); so, his lessee (x); so, the copyholders of a manor may allege a prescription in the bishop, lord of the manor, for their discharge (y); so, a parson having glebe in another parish (z).

Spiritual persons generally exempt.

Regularly no layman can be discharged from the payment of tithes; but to this rule there are several exceptions, and laymen have been discharged four several ways—as 1st.

Laymen never exempt as a rule.

Prescription is of two kinds, namely, prescription in non modo decimandi, which is a total discharge, and prescription de modo decimandi, which is a partial discharge. The queen by her prerogative may prescribe in non modo decimandi, for she is mixta persona (b); but without a particular prescription she will not be discharged from tithes for the ancient demesnes of the Crown (c); so, if she aliens the land the prescription is destroyed (c); so, a man may prescribe that by the custom of the country no tithes are paid for the milk of ewes (d); but it is said in the books that a layman may prescribe de modo decimandi, but not in non modo decimandi, because without special matter shewn it shall not be intended that he has any lawful discharge (e); so, a man may prescribe to be discharged from the payment of tithes because that a modus has been paid time whereof &c. in lieu of the same tithe, and such modus may commence upon a real composition (f). A real composition was when land was given by a man to a parson with consent of the patron and ordinary, that he might be discharged of all his tithes, and a modus was paid in lieu of them (g), and this discharge went with the land into whatever hands it came (h).

By Act of Parliament lands in the hands of all religious bodies were discharged by their order from the payment of tithes, and all the lands which belonged to such orders at the time of the dissolution were by force of the statutes in the reign of Hen. 8 declared exempt from tithes, whether in the hands of the King or his patentees; but it has been held that a tenant for life or years is not within the statute for discharging tithes heretofore part of the possessions of a

This general view of the law of tithes will, it is presumed, suffice to connect the old and new law, as no questions can be raised on the subject of exemptions when the Tithes Commutation Acts come into full operation, provision being made by the Act for settling all matters of dispute previously. See further, infra, § 141 et seq.

VIII. Law of Tithes and Rent-charges under the Tithes Commutation Acts.

141. The Tithes Commutation Acts are four in number, namely, the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, the General Act; 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 69, an amendment of the same; 1 & 2 V. c. 64, for facilitating the merger of rent-charges; and the 2 & 3 V. c. 32, another amendment of the General Act. (See Dig. P. i. tit. TITHES). These statutes are to be considered as one enactment, the object of which is to substitute a corn-rent, payable in money, and permanent in quantity, though fluctuating in value, for all tithes, the same to be payable in the nature of a rent-charge issuing out of the land charged therewith, by two equal half-yearly payments on the 1st July and 1st January in every year.

Object of the Acts.

Commutation of tithes for a rent-charge.

The law of tithes and rent-charges under and since these statutes respect, 1. The apportionment of the rent-charge; 2. The recovery of the rent-charge; 3. The rateability of the rent-charge; 4. Merger of the rent-charge; 5. Other incidents to the rent-charge; 6. Extent of the Tithes Commutation Acts as to rent-charges.

1. Apportionment of the Rent-charge.

Apportionment in respect of the land.

142. The apportionment of the rent-charge under these Acts is of two kinds, namely, that which respects the land, and that which respects the person entitled to the rent-charge.

As to the first of these apportionments: the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, s. 33, directs that the total sum to be paid by way of rent-charge instead of tithes, shall be apportioned amongst the several lands in the parish, having regard to the average titheable produce and productive quality of the lands, so that in each case the several lands shall have the full benefit of every modus and composition real, prescriptive and customary payment, and of every exemption from, or non-liability to tithes relating to the said lands respectively, and having regard to the several tithes to which the said lands are severally liable. By sect. 58 the rent-charge intended to be charged upon any lands may, before the confirmation of the apportionment, at the request of the owner thereof, be specially apportioned upon particular lands, in such manner and proportion as he, with the consent of the person entitled to the rent-charge, may direct; and by sect. 72, the Commissioners of the Land-tax are empowered, with the consent of two justices and at the request of the land-owners, to alter the apportionment. By sect. 55, a draught of every apportionment is to be made, which is to state the name or description and the true or estimated quantity in statute measure of the several lands to be comprised in the apportionment, and to set forth the names and description of the proprietors and occupiers, and whether the lands are cultivated as arable, meadow, or pasture land, or as woodland, common land, or howsoever otherwise, and to refer, by a number set against the description of such lands, to a map or plan; and such draught shall also state the amount charged upon the said several lands, and to whom and in what right the same shall be respectively payable.

143. By the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 22, s. 2, it is provided, that all rent-charges, moduses, compositions, &c. shall be apportioned in such manner on the death of any person interested therein, and the executors and administrators of such person shall be entitled to a proportion of such rents, &c. according to the time which has elapsed since the last periodical payment up to the day of the death; and as by sect. 86 of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, the provisions of that Act are made to extend to all rent-charges under this Tithes Commutation Act, it follows, that if the interest of the owner of the rent-charge should cease before the 1st January or 1st July, (the appointed times of payment), such owner or his representative will be entitled to a proportional part of the rent-charge for the time which may have elapsed from the last day of payment to the time of his interest determining.

2. Recovery of the Rent-charge.

144. At the common law there was no distress for tithes, but the 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 34; 1 Gt. 1, st. 2, c. 6; 53 Gt. 3, c. 127, s. 6; 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 74, give summary powers to justices to enforce the payment of tithes against Quakers. By the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, ss. 81, 82, the mode of recovering the rent-charge in arrear is by distraining for it in the same manner as a landlord recovers rent in arrear. Such power is given to the owner at the expiration of twenty-one days after any half-yearly day of payment, but not more than two years' arrears shall at any time be recoverable by distress; by which provision the law is so far altered that where, by an Inclosure Act, a corn-rent was made payable in lieu of tithes, the landlord was held liable to the payment of the same during all the time that he was legally in possession of the lands (k). As a further remedy for the recovery of arrears, after forty days, possession of the land may be given to the owner of the rent-charge until the arrears

The remedy of distress is also extended to Quakers, whose goods may be distrained wherever found, whether on the premises or elsewhere; but the Act directs, that, in all cases of distress upon the goods of such persons, they may be sold without the necessity, as in the case of other persons, of their being impounded for the five days.

3. Rateability of Rent-charges.

145. By sect. 69 of 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, every rent-charge payable in lieu of tithes is liable to the same rates as tithes have been; and as to what rates and taxes tithes were liable to, see further, ante, § 134.

4. Merger of Rent-charge.

When applicable as in regard to the tithes.

146. The power of merging rent-charges, payable in lieu of tithes, is altogether new, and applies of course only to impropriate tithes; by sect. 71 of 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, tenants in fee-simple or fee-tail, who are possessed of both the land and the tithes or of any rent-charge in lieu of tithes, are enabled by any deed or declaration under their hands or seals, to be made in such form as the Tithe Commissioners approve of, to release, assign, or otherwise dispose of the rent-charge, so that the same may be absolutely merged and extinguished in the freehold and inheritance of the land on which the same has been charged. This power was extended by the 1 & 2 V. c. 64 to all persons having powers of appointment over the fee-simple of tithes or rent-charge, and also to tenants for life, in cases where the tithes or rent-charge and the lands are settled to the same uses, and to copyhold as well as freehold.

By sect. 1 of 2 & 3 V. c. 62, it is provided, that on the merger of tithes or rent-charge the lands in which such merger takes effect shall be subject to any charge, incumbrance, or liability which lawfully existed on such tithes or rent-charge. Among the charges to which tithes were liable may be reckoned the liability to the repairs of the chancel, stipends of ministers, fee-farm rents, and the like; and by sect. 2 of this last Act no deed or declaration for the merger of tithes shall be chargeable with stamp duty. By sect. 7 of 2 & 3 V. c. 62, tithes or rent-charge of glebe land may be merged.

5. Incidents to Tithes and Rent-charges.

147. By sect. 71 of 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, rent-charges are made subject to the same incumbrances and incidents as tithes were before this Act, and persons are to have the same remedies for recovering the same as if their right had accrued after the commutation; but it is provided that nothing in the Act should give validity to any mortgage or other incumbrance which before the passing of the Act was invalid or could not be enforced. The mortgages and incumbrances here referred particularly to are the chargings upon benefices prohibited by 13 El. c. 20. See Dig. P. I. II. tit. BENEFICE.

as tithes.

By the same section it is provided that every estate for life or other greater estate shall be taken to be an estate of freehold, and every estate in such rent-charge shall be subject to the same liabilities and incidents as the like estate in the tithes commuted for such rent-charge; and where any lands were exempted from tithe while in the occupation of the owner thereof by reason of being glebe, or of having been heretofore parcel of the possessions of any privileged order, the same lands shall be in like manner exempted from the payment of the rent-charge apportioned on them whilst in the occupation of the owner thereof; and where by any Act of Parliament as in the case of redeeming the land-tax, (see Dig. P. I. tit. LAND-TAX), and mortgaging benefices under 17 G. 3, c. 53, (see Dig. P. I. II. tit. 6. Extent of the Tithes Commutation Acts as to Rent-charges.

148. By the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, ss. 26, 27, 28, provisions are made for giving land in lieu of tithes to ecclesiastical persons, but not to lay impropriators. Not more than twenty acres of land may be so given in exchange, and the same is to be effected by an agreement which is to operate as a conveyance, and the lands so given in exchange are to be subject to the same uses and trusts as the tithes were subject to. By this Act land in lieu of tithes could not be given after the confirmation of the apportionment; but by the 2 & 3 V. c. 62 such exchanges may be made at any time while the commission lasts.

Commutation
of personal tithes.

Easter offerings, mortuaries, surplice fees, tithes of fish or of fishing, and all personal tithes other than the tithes of mills or mineral tithes, are excluded from the operation of the 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 71, unless by some special provision to be inserted in any parochial agreement; but the 2 & 3 V. c. 62, s. 6, empowers land-owners and tithe-owners before the confirmation of any apportionment, after a compulsory award, to enter into an agreement for the commutation of such Easter offerings, &c.

Tithes in London.

Tithes in London, which are regulated first by an ancient constitution of the church and afterwards by the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 15, are excepted from all other Acts on the subject of tithes. RENT.

§ 149. The word "rent" signifies properly a return, and may be defined a return in acknowledgment given for the possession of some corporeal hereditament, or in other words "an annual return made by the tenant in labour, money, or provisions, as a retribution for the land enjoyed" (1). The subject of rent may be considered under the following heads:—

Definition.

1. The nature and different kinds of rent;
2. Creation and reservation of rent;
3. What estates may be had in a rent;
4. Payment of rent;
5. Extinguishment and suspension of rent;
6. Apportionment of rent;
7. Recovery of rent.

I. Nature of Rent and its different Kinds.

§ 150. *Need not be Money.Must be something certain.Must not be Parcel of the Profits.Nor a Sum in gross.*151. *Different Kinds of Rent.Rent-service.*152. Rent-charge.What good as a Rent-charge.§ 153. *Rent-seck.*154. *Other Rents:Rack-rent.Rents of Assize.Chief Rents.Quit-rents.Viscontiel Rents.*155. Fines.Nomine Panae, or Penal Rent.

150. Although a rent must be a return of profit, yet it need not be a sum of money, as it usually is, for it may be in hawks, capons, corn, or other profit lying in render (m); or it may be in an office, or attendance (m). It must however be a something certain, and therefore where a man demised rendering rent "after the rate of £ per ann.," this was held void because it did not appear what rent should be paid in certain (n). But if it can be reduced to a certainty it will be sufficient (o).

Must not be parcel of the profits.

So, a rent must not be parcel of the annual profits themselves, as the vesture or herbage of the land or the like (p); and where it is a corn-rent, as in the case of hospital leases, and the reddendum is "so many quarters of corn," it will be understood to mean legal quarters, reckoning the bushel at eight gallons (q).

Nor a sum in gross.

So, where a sum of money is made payable for goodwill over and above the rent, this additional sum, though payable annually, was not to be considered as rent, only as a sum in gross (r); so, if A. enfeoff B. upon condition that B. and his heirs shall render to C. and his heirs a yearly rent of 10s., and if he fail of payment, it shall be lawful for A. and his heirs to re-enter, this is not in nature of any sort of rent, but a sum in gross, which the feoffee is obliged to pay, to prevent the re-entry of the feoffor, for at common law it could not be good as a rent-service, because nothing passed from C. for which a retribution ought to be made (s); so, where a sum is agreed to be paid annually it will not be deemed rent, so as to subject the party to distress, where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist (t); but when it appears to be the intention of the parties, money will be deemed to be rent, which is agreed to be paid upon a lease, although the relation of landlord and tenant have not actually commenced (u).

Rent-service is said to be where the tenant holds his land by fealty and certain rent (x), and this is properly what is now understood by the word "rent." It was formerly so called because the return consisted in some corporal service, as ploughing the lord's land. To this kind of rent distress is inseparably incident, and for that reason it is absolutely necessary that the rent should be certain, otherwise the lessor cannot distrain (y); but if a man make a lease for life, or gift in tail, he must save the reversion to himself, or he will not have the remedy by distress (z), unless there be a clause in the deed reserving a power of distress; in that case it will be a rent-charge, because the land is charged with such distress by force of the writing only, and not of common right (a).

of rent.
Rent-service.

152. A rent-charge is any rent granted out of lands by deed with a clause of distress, whence it derives its name, because the land is charged with distress by the express provision of the parties, which it would not otherwise be. In this manner a man may make over to another the whole of his estate, with a certain rent payable thereout; and although he reserve to himself no reversion, he may yet retain his remedy by distress (b). So, if a man makes a feoffment in fee by deed-poll reserving rent, and provides that if the rent be behind it shall be lawful for him to distrain, this will be a rent-charge, the words amounting to a grant from the feoffee (c); for a reservation in a deed-poll is good, because whoever claims any estate under a deed must take it on the terms expressed in the grant (d); so, if a man seised of lands in fee bind his goods and lands to the payment of a yearly sum to A., this is a good rent-charge with power to distrain, although there be no express words of charge, nor to distrain (e).

So, a rent granted by parol by one co-parcener to another for equality of partition was good as a rent-charge, and she might distrain for the same, because co-parceners are in by descent, and are compellable to make partition, and therefore such a rent, though made without deed, would before the 7 & 8 V. c. 76 (f) not have been construed a rent-seck, so as to deprive the party of her remedy by distress (f); and for the same reason where a rent was granted to a widow without deed out of the land whereof she was dowerable, she might, nevertheless, distrain for the same (g). A rent-charge may now be created either by grant or by the Statute of Uses, and the statute has been construed to extend to all rents that might hereafter be granted to the use of any one (h).

Rent-seck and other rents.

153. A rent-seck was properly a rent reserved by deed without any clause of distress, and it was so called because it was prima facie barren or unprofitable to the grantee, as, until seisin had, he had no remedy for it (i); but this distinction is now done away by the 4 G. 2, c. 238, which gives the same remedy for rent-seck as for other rents.

Other rents.

154. To the above may be added some particular kinds of rents, as fee-farm rents, rack-rent, rents of assize or chief rents, quit-rents, and viscontiel rents. A fee-farm rent is a rent-charge [or it is said that it might be a rent-seck (k)] issuing out of an estate in fee, which it is said must be of at least one-fourth of the value of the land (l). Rack-rent.

Rents of assize are the established rents of the freeholders and copyholders of a manor; they are termed chief rents when payable by the freeholders, and quit-rents when payable by either freeholders or copyholders, so called because the tenant thereby goes quit and free of all other services (o). Payment of a rent to the lord of a manor for a series of years is evidence only of a title to the rent, but not to the land in respect of which the rent is paid (p); the presumption, however, is that such rent is a quit-rent (p).

Viscontiel rents are such as were formerly received by the sheriff before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 99, which relieves him from accounting for such rents. (See Dig. P. 1. tit. Accounts). All these rents are continued, with other manorial rights, by the 12 C. 2, c. 24, s. 5, which abolishes military tenures.

155. There is also another kind of rent which is sometimes called forehand rent, or foregift, but more usually a fine, which is a premium given by the tenant at the time of taking the lease, as on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations, which is considered in the nature of an improved rent (q).

1. By what Words and in what Manner a Rent may be created or reserved.

157. The creation or reservation of rent may be considered as respects a rent-service or a rent-charge.

A rent-service, being something in retribution for the land demised, must be reserved by such words as imply a return of something which was not in the grantor before, in lieu of the land given, and therefore is properly reserved by the words reservando, reddendo, &c. (s); so, the words in a demise "provided the lessee shall pay" are a good reservation (t); so, if lands be leased to A., and he covenant and grant to render and pay for the said lands every year during the said term £10, this amounts to a reservation (u); so, if a man, in consideration of rent after mentioned, lets, and the lessee covenants to pay so much rent, without any reddendum, it will be a good reservation (x).

Mode of reserving a rent-service.

But if a lease be made "excepting" so much rent, this will not be a good reservation, because this word implies a reservation to the lessor of something then in his possession, and which would otherwise pass by the lease (y); so, if a man makes a lease "saving" 20*s.* rent, this is not a good reservation, because there can be no saving of anything not in being (z).

entire in the reddendum, there though the rent be after apportioned to the several parcels leased, yet the reservation shall be taken as one and entire, but it is otherwise where the rent is not reserved entire, for then the rent is several and apportioned to the several things demised (a); and as there may be several reservations in the same lease by the words of the parties, so there may be by act of law, as where a lease for life is made to a bishop in his public capacity, and to J. S., reserving a rent; the leasees in that case are not joint-tenants, but tenants in common, and therefore the reservation of the rent must be several too, and the reversion to which the rent is incident must follow the nature of the particular estates on which it depends (b); so, if there be two tenants in common, and they make a lease for life rendering rent, this reservation, though made by joint words, shall follow the nature of the reversion, which is several in the lessors, and therefore it has been held, that they should be put to their several assizes, if they had been disseised, as if there had been distinct reservations (c).

a rent-charge.

169. The usual and proper way of creating a rent-charge is, in the words of Littleton, "When a man seised of lands grants, by deed-poll or indenture, a yearly rent issuing out of the same land, to another in fee, in tail or for life, with a clause of distress, this is a rent-charge" (d); and even since the Statute of Quia Emptores, if a man make a feoffment in fee, reserving rent, and if the rent be behind, that it shall be lawful for him to distrain, it is a rent-charge; and so the law creates a rent-charge in many other cases where there are no words of granting, it being the design of the law to render contracts binding, so far as the intention of the parties may be collected from the deed (e);

therefore, if a man bind himself to J. S. in an annual rent, to be yearly issuing out of such a manor, and subject the said manor and all the chattels therein to a distress, this amounts to a good grant of the rent, and J. S. may distrain for it (f); but if a man grant a rent of 40*s.* out of the manor of D., and if the rent be behind that the grantee shall distrain in the manor of S., this power of distress out of the manor will not amount to the grant of a rent-charge out of such manor, for here is a plain grant of rent out of the manor of D., and the distress is given in S. only as a means for the recovery of it (g).

But if a rent be granted to A., and that if the rent be behind a stranger shall distrain for it for the use of the grantee, this is a good grant of a rent-charge to A., the power of distress being given to the stranger for his benefit (h); so, if A. leases a manor for life, rendering rent, and afterwards grants this rent in fee to another, to have after the death of tenant for life, with power to distrain for it, this is a good grant of a rent-charge in fee (h); so, if A. grant to B. a rent of £5, to be taken out of his lands, which rent A. has of the grant of his father, though A. had never such rent from the grant of his father, yet this grant of A.'s shall be good to create a rent-charge in B., and a mistake in the description of the thing referred to shall not render the contract ineffectual (i).

Again, if a man seised of twenty acres of land grant a rent of 20*s.* to be issuing out of a certain acre of his land, or out of every acre of his land, this is in the nature of a several grant out of every acre, for the grant shall be taken most strongly against the grantor, and the grantee shall have 20*s.* out of each acre (j); and so, if there be two tenants in common, and they grant a rent of 20*s.* per annum out of their land, the grantee shall have 40*s.* rent; for as their estate is several, so shall their grant be too, and therefore each shall be taken to grant a several rent of 20*s.* (k)

2. To whom the Reservation may be made.

To the feoffor,
&c.

160. As a rule, no rent (which is properly said to be rent) may be reserved to any but the feoffor, donor, lessor, or his heirs, and in no manner may it be reserved to a stranger (l), for it ought to be made to him from whom the land passes (l); therefore, if a father seised in fee leases rendering rent to his son, it is void, for the son takes as a purchaser, and is quasi a stranger; it should therefore be to the heir of the lessor (m); but if a man makes a lease to commence after his death, reserving rent to his heirs, this will be deemed a good rent-service arising in the heir, not by way of purchase, but as incident to the reversion descending to the heir, and therefore may be released by the ancestor during his life, which it could not be, if it was a new purchase in the heir (n). So, a man may reserve a rent to himself for life and a different rent to his heir (o), or he may reserve rent to his heir omitting himself (o).

The Queen is an exception to this rule, for she may make reservation of rent to a stranger (p); therefore, where the King made a lease of a house belonging to his housekeeper of Whitehall, reserving a rent to the housekeeper for the time being, though in this case it was admitted that the King might reserve rent to a stranger, yet, it being here made to an officer who was removable at will, the reservation was held ill (q).

reserving rent to one of them, this should enure to them both; but if so reserved by deed indented, it should enure to him alone by way of conclusion (r); and the reason for the difference is this, that when the lease is by deed-poll, the rent shall follow the reversion, which is jointly in both lessors; but where the lease is by indenture, the parties are estopped to claim the rent in any other manner than as it is reserved by the deed, because the indenture is the deed of each party, and no man shall be allowed to recede from or vary his own solemn act (s).

162. A reservation may be either general or particular. General reservation.

Where a reservation of the rent is general, the law directs that it shall be carried over according to the intent and the nature of the thing demised (t); therefore if a tenant in tail makes a lease for years, rendering rent to him and his heirs, it was held, that the rent should go to the heir in tail along with the reversion, for the law uses all industry imaginable to conform the reservation to the estate (t); so, where tenant for life, with several limitations over and with power to make leases, demises, reserving rent to him and his heirs, it was adjudged that it should belong to him in remainder (u); so, where the words are general, they will be expanded according to law; therefore, if tenant in tail to him and the heirs male of the body of his father lets the land, rendering rent to him, his heirs and assigns, the rent shall go to the heir male of the body of the father, though he be not heir to the lessor, for it is incident to the reversion (v).

the reservation is good only during his life, and it shall never be carried further than the period of time the lessor himself has fixed for it (x); but upon this point there is some diversity in the books, see 10 E. 4, 18; 1 Dy. 45 a; 1 Inst. 47. a.; for Littleton in the case cited was of a contrary opinion, and held that "if I let land to a man for a term of years, rendering to me a certain rent, without saying and to my heirs, yet if I die within the term, my heir shall have the rent, for it is annexed to the reversion, which is descended to my heir" (y).

Where the reservation is special and to improper persons, there the law follows the words; therefore if rent is reserved to the lessor and his executors, he having the freehold, it will determine at his death, because the reversion, to which the rent is incident, descends to the heir (b); so, if a lease be made of a term for years, reserving rent to the lessor and his heirs, such rent will determine by the death of the lessor, for the heir cannot have it, as he cannot succeed to the estate, being only a chattel, and the executor cannot have it, there being no words to carry it to him (c). But the words "during the term" have been held sufficient to carry the rent to the heir, where the lessor was seised in fee (d), and for the same reason if a termor for fifty years leases for twenty-five years, though reserving rent to him and his heirs during the term, yet the executors shall have the rent (e); so, where no reversion is left in the lessor, and the but where no estate passes there ought to be no rent, the rent being a retribution or return for something given (l), therefore if there were lord and tenant, and the tenant held of the lord by fealty and 10*s.* rent, and the lord released to the tenant or confirmed his estate, he yielding to the lord a hawk or rose yearly, this new reservation was held void, because there was no estate given to the tenant, for which he should make that new return of service to the lord (m); but if there be tenant for life, and he in the reversion release to him in tail, reserving rent, the reservation is good, because the tenant's estate is enlarged by the release (n); so, if the lord of a manor by indenture at common law releases to his copyholder in fee, to him and his heirs, or confirms such lands to his copyholder and his heirs, reserving a rent, this reservation is good, because the release or confirmation enures by way of mitter le estate to pass an estate at common law to him, when before he had but a copyhold estate (o); and so, in other cases upon releases which enure by way of mitter le estate, as by one joint tenant to another, a rent may be reserved (p); but upon a release or confirmation which enures by way of mitter le droit only no rent can be reserved, because such release operates by way of extinguishment (p).

and sale.

167. At common law no rent could have been reserved upon a bargain and sale, because only a use passed, which was not any estate to which the bargainor could have had recourse for a distress, but now by the Statute of Uses, the use and possession passing together, it amounts to a grant of the land itself (q), and the reservation, as if out of the estate executed by the statute, will not be deemed a use upon a use (r); so, on the same principle, it has been held that stand seised.

168. It seems that the effect of reserving rent upon a lease or a gift in tail and upon a feoffment is not in all cases the same. If a man seised of land on the part of his mother makes a lease or a gift in tail, reserving rent to him and his heirs, this rent shall go with the reversion to the heirs on the part of the mother, because the nature of the contract is such that the retribution should go to those who lose the profit of the land during the gift or lease (t); but if in like case he had made a feoffment in fee, reserving rent to him and his heirs, the rent in that case would go to the heir on the part of the father, because here is an entire disposition, and the rent is in the nature of a new purchase, coming into the family from the grant of the feoffee, and therefore the blood of the father shall be preferred (t).

Distinction between a lease
ment.

169. There can be no rent reserved upon any conveyance that enures by way of extinguishment (u), because in such case there is no reversion left in him to create a tenure; therefore if a lessee surrendered his estate, reserving rent, this reservation was held not to be good (x); but such a reservation may be good by way of contract, and an action of debt may be brought upon it (y).

able by the name of rent upon the contract (z). And so, where an assignee has assigned over a term, rent may in that case be recoverable against the second assignee (z).

So, an agreement for a lease at a rent certain is not a sufficient reservation of rent, so as to constitute a demise, and therefore if a party be let into possession under such an agreement, he cannot distrain, although he may have an action of debt (a), see further, 1 Prec. in Conv. tit. AGREEMENTS.

Fines.

So, a rent could not be reserved on a fine sur cognisance de droit come ceo or any other fine which was executed; sed secus where an estate for life only was conveyed by the fine (b).

4. Upon what Things Rent may be reserved, or out of what it may issue.

General rule.

170. It is laid down as a rule, that a rent cannot issue out of any inheritance but such as is said to be manurable, wherein an entry may be made and distress taken, as lands and tenements; therefore a lease of the verdure or herbage of the land, reserving rent, is good, for the lessor may enter upon the land to distrain (c); but the grant of a rent-charge out of land, of which the grantor is not seised at the time of the grant, is void, although the grantor should afterwards purchase the same lands (d).

Rent may issue out of corporeal things.

But not out of incorporeal
hereditaments.

171. As a consequence of this rule no rent can be reserved upon any incorporeal hereditament or thing lying in grant, because to such things recourse cannot be had for a distress (e); therefore no rent can properly be reserved for a common, as the common belongs to many, and it cannot be liable to distress by the act of one (f); yet by the 11

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

172. Upon the same principle there cannot at common law be a rent reserved upon tithes, because there is no place upon which a distress may be taken (g); but an action of debt is given by the 5 G. 3, c. 17, to ecclesiastical persons for arrears of rent upon leases of tithes, &c.; so, where a rent-charge of £20 was devised out of a rectory, the glebe whereof amounted to 40*s. per annum* only, the whole rectory was in equity held liable to the rent (h); so, where a lease was made of land and tithes, the rent was held to issue out of the land and not out of the tithes (i).

So, neither can a rent issue out of a hundred, fair, office, and the like, for these were instituted for public purposes (k); so, likewise not out of rent (l); but a rent reserved on a lease made of an incorporeal thing, as of a fair, is good by way of contract between lessor and lessee (m).

Not to issue out of a hundred, &c.

Not out of rent.

So, a rent must be reserved out of an estate that passes by a conveyance, and not out of a right; and therefore if disseisee release to the disseissor of land, reserving a rent, the reservation is void (n).

So, a rent cannot issue out of a term for years, therefore the lessee having assigned cannot distrain (o), but he must bring his action on the contract (o); so, if a lease be made of an incorporeal hereditament, reserving rent, such reservation is good to bind the lessee by way of contract for the non-performance of which the lessor shall have his action of debt (p); but although a rent cannot issue out of chattels, yet it has been held, that distress may be made for the rent of furnished lodgings, for the rent issues out of the realty and not out of the goods (q).

Exceptions.

173. Although reversions and remainders are incorporeal hereditaments, and can pass only by grant, yet a rent may be reserved upon a lease of them, because although the grantor has no remedy for them during the continuance of the particular estate, yet there will be a remedy by distress when they come into possession (r); so, and for the same reason it is, if the lord grants his seignory, reserving rent, for here is a prospect, though distant, of a remedy by distress upon the escheat of the tenancy (s); so, on the same principle, if a man grants a future interest in land, he may reserve a rent immediately, for he may have his remedy by distress when the lessee comes into possession (t).

The Crown.

174. The Crown is also in general excepted from the rule above mentioned, and the queen may reserve rent on incorporeal hereditaments, because she may distrain in all the lands of her lessee for the rent (u); but if the queen's tenant makes a lease of lands not holden of her, either for years or at will, she cannot distrain such lands in the hands of an under-lessee (x); so, if lands are extended on an elegit, or are under sequestration, they are exempt from distress; but in this last case, upon application to a court of equity, liberty will be given to distrain without incurring a contempt of court (x).

5. Reservations upon Leases made under Powers.

175. Questions relating to this subject have arisen either on the amount of rent or the mode of reservation. Sometimes a power is given of leasing on lives and upon the payment of fines, as the lives drop, which are considered among the annual profits(y); but the more usual provision, in settlements, is to require the best rent to be reserved, without taking any fine or foregift; and whether the best rent has been reserved is commonly left to the decision of the jury(z): and although the best rent reserved be the full value, yet if satisfactory evidence can be produced to a jury, that a tenant was willing to give additional rent in lieu of money, agreed to be laid out in improvements, it has been held that the lease could not be supported(a), when, from the quantity and nature of the property demised, it is not possible to ascertain whether the rent reserved is the best rent, the lease will be deemed invalid(b).

rent.

176. If a fine be taken contrary to the terms of the power, the lease cannot be supported(c); and anything in the form of a premium has been held to come within the prohibitory clause(d).

Mode of reservation.

Formerly a rent under leasing powers was reserved by the words "the ancient or usual rent," and the better opinion is, that by these words is to be understood the rent reserved at the time of the creation of the power, where a lease was then in being, or reserved in the lease immediately preceding that time (e), and where gold has been usually reserved, silver cannot be made payable in lieu of it (g); so, if commonly paid at four days, a reservation at one or two days is bad (h), but a mere difference of words is not material, therefore a reservation of eight bushels of wheat, in lieu of a quarter of wheat is good, because it is all one in quantity, value and nature (h).

Rent must be certain.

177. Regularly the rent to be paid should be specified in the lease, but if there be words in the reservation by which the rent can be ascertained, it will be sufficient (i); but when the reservation is vague and indefinite the lease will be void (k).

Time of payment.

Where the rent is required to be reserved at particular days, the reservation must be accordingly, but where merely the best yearly rent is required, it may be made payable quarterly or otherwise (l), but the rent cannot be reserved either after or before the day appointed (m).

Entire or distinct reservations.

Where one entire gross sum is reserved on the demise of lands, part of which are not within the power, the demise is void (n); as where opened and unopened mines were demised by one deed, containing a general reservation, and the power did not authorize a demise of unopened mines, it was held that the whole was void (o) unless where the rent is reserved according to the quantity or produce (o), or there is a distinct reservation of a particular sum in respect of the lands comprised in the power (p).

178. Rent is susceptible of the same limitations as land, Fee-simple. and may therefore be granted in fee, in tail or for life (r). When a rent was granted in fee, with a clause of distress, and a fine was levied to the intent, that if the rent were behind, the grantee might enter, it was held that this created a contingent and future interest, which was a matter of inheritance, and being a security for the payment of the rent, might well be transferred therewith, for by the grant of the rent the penalty and the advantage passed (s).

179. There may be a limitation in tail of a rent, as of Fee-tail. land, but with this difference, that the tenant in tail of lands, with the immediate reversion in fee in the donor, might by a common recovery have barred the entail and the reversion (as he may now under the 3 & 4 W. c. 74, see Dig. For life.

180. So a rent may be granted to one for his own life or the life of another (u); but if granted to A. for the life of another, remainder to B., although A. dies, yet the remainder is good (u). But a rent for life granted out of a term for years is but a chattel, and shall be satisfied out of the term until one or other estate determines (x), but when a rent is granted out of land in fee, and out of a term for years for the life of the grantee, this, as an estate of freehold, cannot issue out of the term, but out of the land which the grantor has in fee-simple (y).

Occupancy.

By the common law there could be no general occupant of a rent, therefore if a rent were granted to A., his executors and administrators during the life of B., and A. died intestate before cestui que vie, it was held, that the rent must determine, for his administrator could not claim it either as assign or occupant (z); sed secus where there is a special occupant (a); and it has been thought that executors and administrators, if named in the grant, might have taken an estate pur autre vie, though a freehold, even before the 29 C. 2, c. 3, and 14 G. 2, c. 20, see Dy. 338; also further, Dig. 182. There may be curtesy in a rent, and a man may be tenant by the curtesy of a rent although the wife die before the rent becomes due and she has but a seisin in law, because, as Lord Coke says, the husband could by no industry attain to any other seisin, and impotentia excusat legem (c); so, where a rent-charge was granted to a woman and her heirs, payable at two feasts in the year, the first payment to be made at such of the said feasts as should happen after the death of J. S.; the woman married, had issue and died; it seems to have been the inclination of the court, that the husband should be tenant by the curtesy of the rent, for although the rent was to commence in futuro yet it was granted over presently, which proved to be in esse, so that the wife might be said habere hereditatem, and the seisin was not material in the case of a rent (d). So, it is said that if a woman make a gift in tail, reserving a rent to her and her heirs, then takes husband and has issue, and the donee dies without issue, the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesy of the rent, for that it was determined by the act of God, and no estate thereof remained; but if a man seised in fee of a rent, makes a gift in tail general to a woman, who takes husband and has issue, the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy of the rent, because the rent remains (e); so, if it be a rent de novo granted in tail, and the wife dies without issue, the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy (f).

rent.

183. A woman shall have dower of a rent, whether it be rent-service, rent-charge or rent-seck, but it must be an estate in fee-simple (g); for if it be an annuity which charges only the person, and does not issue out of any lands or tenements, she shall not be endowed (g); so, if a man under the old law of dower made a lease for life of certain lands reserving a rent to him and his heirs, and then took a wife, she should not be endowed of the reversion because there was no seisin either in deed or in law, nor of the rent because the husband had but a particular estate therein; sed secus if the husband had made a lease for years (h).

So, for the same reason if the freehold of the rent were suspended during the coverture, a woman should not be endowed (i).

So, if a rent de novo were granted in tail without any remainder over, and tenant in tail took wife and died without issue, held that the wife should not be endowed because the thing out of which the dower was to arise was not in being; but it was otherwise where tenant in tail married and died without issue, whereby the estate tail was determined: for the wife in that case should be endowed notwithstanding, because the land was in being, though the estate tail therein was determined, and the dower was in some respects a continuance of the estate tail (k), and see further as to dower post, tit. DOWER.

So, in the same case, if a rent in esse were granted to A. in tail, remainder to B. in fee, and A. married and died without issue, it was held, that the wife should be endowed: and so, if a rent de novo were granted to A. in tail, remainder to B. in fee, and A. married and died without issue, yet his wife should be endowed (k).

of rent, as for instance to entitle a man to curtesy. (See ante, § 182). So, there is a distinction between a rent at common law, and where it is limited under the Statute of Uses, as where land is conveyed to A. and his heirs to the use of B. that he may receive thereout an annual rent, there the use of the rent is immediately executed by the statute in B. (t).

Seisin of a rent-charge.

As to a rent-charge the grant and delivery of the deed is no seisin of the rent, for the seisin in law, which the grantee has by the grant, is not sufficient to maintain an action (u).

No disseisin of rent.

188. Where a person has been once seised of a rent, he cannot afterwards be disseised of it except at his own election (x); for if A. is seised of a rent-charge, and the tenant of the land pays the rent to another, this will not divest A. of his right; and the payment of the tenant being in his own wrong, the rent still remains in arrear to A. (y).

Transfer of a rent.

189. A rent in esse may be granted or assigned even before the grantor has seisin of it (z), but not during its suspension (a); and a rent-charge might be conveyed by fine and recovery (b), now by the substituted assurance under the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 74, see Dig. P. L. II. tit. FINES AND RECOVERIES. So, it might before the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, have been conveyed by lease and release, and now by release only; so also, by bargain and sale, and covenant to stand seised (c); as well as by grant at common law.

1. Days of Payment of Rent.

191. The days of payment are either by the particular appointment of the parties, or in default thereof by the appointment of law so as to answer the intention of the parties (d); and, therefore, if A. makes a lease to B. the 6th of August, rendering yearly the rent of forty shillings at the two feasts of the year, that is, at Lady-day and Michaelmas, by equal portions; though in this case by the appointment of the parties Lady-day be the first term mentioned, yet the first payment shall be made at Michaelmas ensuing the date of the lease; for without such transposition, the intention of the parties would never be fulfilled; because the rent being reserved annually, the lessor would lose the profits of one-half year, as the lessee would enjoy the land from the date of the lease to the first Michaelmas without paying rent, and so likewise from the last Lady-day of the term to the expiration of it; because, although the lease ended in August, yet the payment was not to be made till Michaelmas, before which the lease expired (e). See also 5 Co. 112; 3 Bulst. 328; 2 Roll. Rep. 213; T. Jo. 109, as to how the law marshals payments.

So, if a man make a lease the first day of May, reserving rent quarterly, this shall be intended quarterly from the making of the lease; for if the beginning of the quarter be construed to be any other day than the date of the lease, the lessor will lose a portion of the profits (f).

General reservation.

192. A rent reserved generally is payable at the end of the year (g); and although there was a parol agreement to pay quarterly, and the rent was accordingly paid quarterly, yet, as there was no mention in the written agreement of the time when the rent was to be paid, it was held, that the rent was still payable yearly, and not quarterly (h); and if the rent is made payable yearly during the time that the lessee shall enjoy the land, the lessor cannot demand this rent half-yearly, but must wait to the end of the year (i).

So, if a man grants a rent of £10 to another, payable at the two usual feasts of the year, this shall be intended by equal portions, though it be not so mentioned in the deed, because where there are two several days appointed for the payment, it is the most equal construction that a moiety of the rent shall be paid at each day (k); and the two usual feasts shall be deemed to be Lady-day and Michaelmas, because they are the days usually appointed in contracts of this nature (l).

When special days of payment are limited by the reddendum, the rent must be computed according to the reddendum, and not according to the habendum; and the computation of the rent according to the habendum is only when the reddendum is general, that is, yielding and paying quarterly so much rent (m).

Days of pay-

Where rent is reserved quarterly or half-quarterly, if required, and the landlord received the rent quarterly for the first twelve months, it was held, that he could not without notice distrain for a half-quarter's rent (n); and if rent is intended to be made payable in advance, it must be so clearly specified; for where a house was let at a yearly rent, payment to commence at Michaelmas, and to be paid three months in advance, such advance to be paid on taking possession, held that this advance was confined to the first quarter only; and if the intention had been otherwise, it ought to have been said "always paid in advance" (o); but under a reddendum of a yearly rent, payable by four equal quarterly payments, commencing from the 25th day of March then instant; the first quarter's rent is payable on the said 25th day of March; and consequently the rent is a before-hand rent (p); and yet under an agreement for the quarterly

2. When Rent is due.

Part of the

194. The time when rent is due by law respects either the part of the day, or the day itself.

As to the part of the day, it seems to be settled that rent is not due until midnight of the day upon which it is reserved (t); although sunset is the time appointed by law to make a proper demand of it, in order to take advantage of a condition of re-entry, and to tender rent in order to save a forfeiture (u).

The day itself.

As to the day itself, it has been held, that where the reservation is in the alternative, to pay at any particular feast, or so many days after, although it is in the election of the lessee to pay at the feast, yet the rent was not legally due until the last of the days after (v); and where the reservation was until a certain feast, the feast-day was held to be inclusive (x); and though there be election to pay on the

The question as to the time when rent is due, affects not only the party liable to pay, but also the party entitled to receive. Rent is not due before the day of payment incurred, and if paid by the tenant before it is due, it is a voluntary payment (z); and if the lessor dies on the day when it ought to be paid, but before midnight, the rent which is incident to the reversion will go with the land to the heir or reversioner; but this is to be understood of the case of a lease made by a person seised in fee, or made under a power; for it is otherwise in the case of a lease made by a tenant for life.

How parties are affected by the law.

Where the rent is once due, or in arrear, it goes to the executor as a chattel, although before it is due he cannot recover it (a); and where a testator died in the afternoon of Michaelmas-day, after having received rent from one of his tenants on the morning of that day, the executor was compelled to account for it to the party entitled (b). As to what goes to the heir, and what to the executor, see further, ante, § 12.

3. Where Rent is payable.

195. Where rent is reserved payable yearly, it is to be paid on the land, for the land is the debtor (c); and it makes no difference that a man has bound himself to perform the covenants of his lease, for the rent may be tendered on the land without seeking the obligee (c). 4. How Rent is payable.

Payment before it is due.

196. If the tenant pay his rent before the day, it is voluntary, and no satisfaction at law; but if it be paid in the name of seisin of rent, it will enure to give seisin (f); but such payment in equity will it seems discharge the lessee (g); but the remainderman may in that case recover it from the personal representatives (g). If rent is payable at the feast of Easter, and the tenant pays the rent in the morning, and the lessor dies at two hours before noon of the same day, this payment although voluntary is a good satisfaction against the heir, but not against the queen (h); and the same has been decreed in equity (i).

debt.

Rent in arrear, whether by deed or parol, is held to be of equal degree with a specialty debt, and therefore in the distribution of a deceased tenant's estate, is to be paid with debts of that degree (k). Rent, like any other species of debt, may be paid by a remittance by the post, and if so directed by the landlord and it be lost, the latter must bear the loss (l); and so a landlord or any other creditor may insist upon payment being made to himself; but having once authorized payment to an agent, he cannot revoke the authority, if the debtor has given such a pledge to pay as would bind him in a court of law (m); and in the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, debt for rent upon an indenture of demise is by a lessor seised in fee, or made by one under a power; in the case of a lease by a tenant it is different. In two particular cases, indeed, it has been held that the executor of a tenant for life was entitled to the rent although the lessor died before it was due; as where A. granted a rent-charge to B., payable at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and B. died on Michaelmas-day after sunset, it was held, that as B. lived till after sunset, which was the legal time for demanding the rent, though he died before twelve at night, it should go to the executor(z); and so, where A., tenant for life, remainder to his wife for life, made a lease reserving rent at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and died on Michaelmas-day about twelve o'clock at noon, his administrator was held to be entitled to this rent(a); for the Court took a difference betwixt a rent incident to a reversion, which must go somewhere (if not to the executor, then to the heir), and where the rent can go nowhere, unless to the executor; in which latter case if the lessor lived to the beginning of the day, at which time a voluntary payment might be made, this would be sufficient to entitle the executor or administrator to the rent, rather than it should be lost(b); but in other cases where the lessor, tenant for life, died before the time reserved for the payment of the rent by the lessee, the rent which accrued from the last quarter to the time of the death was lost, or, in other words, retained by the lessee himself(c); but by the 11 G. 2, c. 9, s. 15, amended and extended by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 22, this portion of the rent is given to the executor or administrator. to him, he will thereby be discharged from the payment of rent (f), for as the rent is something given by way of retribution for the use and occupation of the thing demised, if the tenant be deprived of the land, his obligation to pay the rent ceases (f); but where a party by his own contract imposes on himself a duty or charge, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding inevitable accident (g), therefore under a covenant to pay rent, a lessee is bound to pay the rent during the term, although the house be burnt down (h), and although the case of fire was expressly excepted under the covenant to repair (h), for where a party enters into an absolute contract without any qualification or exception, and receives from the party with whom he contracts the consideration for such engagement, he must abide by the contract (i); and at law it appears to be settled, that, as a consequence of a house being burnt down, a landlord in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary is not bound to rebuild, and the tenant is bound to pay rent (h); and a covenant that in case the premises are burnt down the lessor shall rebuild, otherwise the rent shall cease, will not be considered as coming under the words "usual covenant" (l).

203. In some of the earlier cases a court of equity would grant an injunction against the landlord's claim of rent until the premises were rebuilt (m); and a similar decision was come to in Steele v. Wright (n), but where there are no special circumstances, the general rule prevails, that equity follows the law, therefore where the tenant covenanted to repair, "damage by fire only excepted," and the premises being burnt down, the landlord refused to rebuild the premises, or take a surrender of the lease, and commenced an action at law on the covenant for non-payment of the rent accrued due since the fire, on a bill for an injunction, the Court after full consideration decided, that as there was no defence against an action at law, the tenant had no remedy in equity against the unrestricted covenant to pay the rent (o), and on this principle it has been decided that a tenant has no equity to compel his landlord to expend money received from the insurance office, on the demised premises being burnt down, in rebuilding the premises, or to restrain the landlord from suing for the rent until the premises are rebuilt (p).

204. If the lands demised be evicted from the tenant or recovered by a title paramount, the lessee is for the reason before mentioned (q) discharged from the payment of the rent from the time of such eviction; but notwithstanding such recovery or eviction, the tenant shall pay the rent that became due before the recovery, and therefore rent due from a lessee was held not to be extinguished by the lands being extended by the queen, though it accrued between the extent and the liberate (r); because the enjoyment of the land being the consideration for which the tenant was obliged to pay the rent, so long as the consideration continued, the obligation must be in force (s); but a plea of mere entry by the lessor, or destruction by him of part of the premises, without alleging an actual expulsion, is not sufficient, for these are simple trespasses (t).

So, where a tenant from year to year, at a rent payable half yearly, quitted at the end of a current year without giving notice, and the landlord relet the premises before the end of the next half year, it was held that he had evicted the first tenant and could not recover rent subsequent to the period when he quitted (x); and so, when lands have been let to one who underlet to others, and the latter receive notice to quit from the original landlord, in consequence of which one of them quita, and the premises remain unoccupied, this was held to amount to an eviction, and the landlord could not recover for the unoccupied premises (y); so, where in consequence of disputes between a landlord and a tenant, the latter said he would leave, to which the former assented, he could not recover the quarter's rent (z); but putting up a bill to let the premises which the tenant had quitted without giving the proper notice, did not prevent the landlord from recovering (a).

Where premises are let at an entire rent, an eviction from part, if the tenant thereupon give up possession of the residue, is a complete defence to an action for use and occupation (b); but if the tenant after the eviction continue in possession of the residue, he is liable upon a quantum meruit (c). there were a union of the tenancy and the rent in the same hand, yet as this union was but temporary (for upon the performance of the condition or determination of the particular estate, the tenant is restored to the enjoyment of the land, and consequently, the obligation to pay the rent revives) therefore the rent in such case was only suspended, and not extinguished (z); so, if land descend to two co-parceners in fee, one of whom had a rent-charge in fee, issuing out of the land, the rent it seems is suspended until partition made (a).

Distinction between rent-service and rent-charge.

A distinction has however been taken between a rent-service and a rent-charge, for if a man who has a rent-service purchases part of the land out of which the rent issues, the rent-service is not extinguished but apportioned, so that such purchase is a discharge to the tenant for so much of the rent only as the value of the land purchased amounts to (b); but if a man has a rent-charge and purchases part of the land out of which the rent issues, the whole rent is extinguished and the tenant consequently discharged from the payment of it, and the reason for this extinguishment is—that the rent is entire, and issuing out of every part of the land, therefore by purchase of part it is extinct in the whole and cannot be apportioned, for a rent-charge was against common right, and the law carried such contracts into execution only so far as the rent could take effect according to the original intention of them; when therefore the grantee purchases part of the land, it becomes impossible, by his own act, that the grant should have its due operation (c); but this rule is confined to cases where it is the act of the party (d).

Extinguishment by conjunction of estates.

209. There may be an extinguishment in different ways, as by a conjunction of estates, as where A. leases to B. for 100 years, and B. leases to C. for 20 years, rendering rent; A. granted the reversion to J. S., and J. S. purchased the reversion of the term, held that J. S. shall have neither the rent nor the re-entry (e). If A. devises rent to B., and afterwards makes B. executor, there this rent shall be extinct, but where a man devises the term to one, and a rent out of it to another, and afterwards makes him to whom the rent was devised his executor, he may now elect to have this as legatee (f).

So rent may be extinguished by confirmation, as where a lease was made for life rendering rent, and after the lessor granted and confirmed the same tenements, the better opinion was that by this the rent was extinct (g); so, where lessee of twenty acres rendering rent, grants all his estate in one of the acres to J. S., and the lessor confirms the estate of J. S., that the entire rent was held to be gone in the other acres, being an entire contract (h); but if a man has a rent-charge out of certain land and he confirms the estate which the tenant has in the land, yet the rent-charge remains to the confirmor (i).

So, by grant there may be an extinguishment, as where a lease was made of 100 acres of land rendering rent, and afterwards the lessor granted 50 acres of it, it was held that the grantee should not have any part of the rent, but it was all destroyed (k); so, if the grantee of a rent-charge grants it to the tenant of the land and a stranger, it shall be extinguished but for the moiety, and so it is of a seignory (l); so limiting a remainder over of the land by him to whom the rent was first reserved upon the render by fine of the land entailed, was held to be extinguishment of the rent, and that it could not go to the remainder man (m).

So, there may be extinguishment by purchase of parcel of the land, as where an annual sum is granted out of lands, so that it may be rent or annuity at the election of the grantee, if the grantee purchases parcel before election, he cannot make election afterwards, but the whole is extinguished (n); because the law primâ facie says, that this was a rent-charge and not an annuity (o); but if before election parcel descends on the grantee, if he brings writ of annuity, the annuity is not apportionable, but he shall have the annuity entirely (p). And see further as to the distinction between a rent-service and a rent-charge in case of such purchase, ante, § 208.

By release.

So there may be extinguishment by release, as if the lessor grants to the lessee for life, that he shall be discharged of the rent, this is a good release (q); but there is a diversity between several estates in several lands, and several estates in one land; for if there be tenant for life of lands, the reversion in fee over to another, if they two join in a grant of a rent out of the lands, if the grantee releases either to him in reversion or to tenant for life, the whole rent is extinguished, for it is but one rent and issues out of both estates (r); so, if two tenants in common of land grant a rent-charge of forty shillings out of the same to one in fee, and the grantee releases to one of them, this shall extinguish but twenty shillings, for that the grant in judgment of law is several (s); so, by the release of a seignory a rent-charge is extinct (t); so, if a lease be made to begin at Michaelmas, reserving a rent, and before the day the lessor releases all the right that he has in the land, this cannot enure to enlarge the estate but to extinguish the rent (u); so, where lessee for years assigns the term, and lessor releases all demands to the first lessee, this does not determine the rent, being after the assignment of the term,

I. In respect of Part of the Land.

This kind of apportionment may be considered—first, as to the cases where such apportionment is absolutely admitted; and next as to the cases where it is or is not admitted; and lastly, as to the manner of making the apportionment.

a. Where Apportionment is absolutely admitted.

In case of descend.

Rent may be apportioned as it is extinguished by different means, thus, it may be apportioned by descent, as if a man has a rent-charge, and his father purchases parcel of the tenements charged in fee, and dies, and this parcel descends to his son who has the rent-charge, now this charge shall be apportioned according to the value of the land, because such portion of the land purchased by the father comes to the son not by his own act, but by descent and course of law (z); and so, if the father be grantee of a rent, and the son purchases part of the land charged, and after the death of the father the rent descends to the son, the rent shall be apportioned (a); but as a rule a rent-charge cannot be apportioned by the act of the party, yet to this rule there are exceptions, for if the grantee releases part of his rent to the tenant of the land, such release does not extinguish the whole rent (b); so, if the grantee gives a part of it to a stranger, and (before the 4 A. c. 16, the tenant had attorned) such release makes no alteration in the original grant (b); so, if a rent-charge be extended for debt it is apportionable (c): a rent-service in the like case is always apportionable (d).

grant.

So, there may be an apportionment in the case of a grant. Although it was at first doubted whether a rent-service incident to the reversion might be apportioned by a grant of part of the reversion, yet it is now otherwise settled, and it has been accordingly determined that if a man makes a lease of three acres, each of equal value, rendering three shillings rent, and the lessor grants the reversion of one acre, the grantee shall have 12*d.* rent, for although it was one lease, one reversion, and one rent, yet that was incident to the reversion, which was severable (e); so, if A. seised of one acre in fee, and possessed of a term for years in another, grants a rent out of both to B. in fee, and B. takes a lease or grant of the leasehold acre, the rent shall not thereby be suspended (f).

So, there may be an apportionment by devise, as if A. possessed of a term for twenty years, leases it for ten years, reserving £30 rent, and afterwards A. devises £20 of the rent to three of his sons, equally to be divided between them, it was held that this was a good devise, and each of the sons should have his action of debt for his third part (g).

devise.

So, there may be an apportionment in case of a recovery; therefore, if part of the land be recovered the rent shall be apportioned (h); so, if the father within age purchases parcel of the land charged, and aliens within age, and dies, and the son recovers or enters, yet the land shall be apportioned (i); so, where a man seised in fee takes a wife and makes a feoffment, the feoffee grants a rent-charge of £10 out of the land to the husband and wife and the heirs of the husband, the husband dies, and the wife recovers the moiety for her dower, held that the rent-charge should be apportioned, and she might distrain for her share of the rent (h); and in some cases a rent-charge shall not be wholly extinct where the grantee claims from and under the grantor, as if B. makes a lease of one acre for life to A. and A. is seised of another acre in fee, and A. grants a rent-charge to B. out of both acres, and does waste in the acre which he holds for life, and B. recovers in an action, the whole rent is not extinct but shall be apportioned and yet

B. claims under A. (l); so, if the Queen gives two acres of land of equal value to another in fee, fee-tail, for life or years reserving a rent of two shillings, and the one acre is evicted by a title paramount, the rent shall be apportioned (m).

In case of re-entry.

211. So, there may be apportionment on a re-entry, but where the books speak of an apportionment in case where the lessor enters upon the lessee in part, they are to be understood when the lessor enters lawfully, as upon a surrender, forfeiture and the like (n), but if the lessor act ministerially, as sheriff, in the eviction of the tenant, this will not suspend the rent (o); so, a mere trespass by the lessor will be no suspension of the rent (p); so, where a right of common is recovered by the inhabitants, where part of the lands lie which have been let to the lessee, this has been held not to be such an eviction as by the rules of the common law shall make an apportionment of the rent; for the soil still remains in the lessee (q).

What an eviction.

To occasion a suspension of the rent, there must be an eviction or expulsion of the lessee out of all or some part of the demised premises (r).

Whether there may be a suspension in part is not so settled; my Lord Coke lays it down broadly, that although a rent-service may be extinct for part, and apportioned for the rest, yet it cannot be suspended in part and in esse for the rest (s); but the better opinion appears to be, that in the case at least of a tortious entry by the lessor, the tenant shall be discharged from the payment of the whole rent until he be restored to the whole possession (t). By surrender.

So, although as a rule, if the grantee of a rent-charge purchase parcel of the land out of which it issues, the whole rent is extinct (x), yet if the grantor grant that he may distrain for the same rent in the residue of the land, this amounts to a new grant (y), and the same rent shall be taken for the like rent or the same in quantity.

By purchase.

b. Apportionment admitted or otherwise.

212. As to the cases where apportionment is not admitted, except under special circumstances, a distinction has, in the first place, been taken between the grant of a rent, and the reservation of a rent ; for if a man be seised of two acres of land, of one in fee-simple, and of another in tail, and by his deed grant a rent out of both in fee, in tail, or for life, &c., and dies, the land entailed is discharged, and the land in fee-simple remains charged with the whole rent, for against his own grant he shall not take advantage of the weakness of his estate in part. But if he make a gift in tail, or a lease for life or for years of both acres, reserving a rent, the donor or lessor dies, the issue in tail avoids the gift or lease, the rent shall be apportioned, for seeing the rent is reserved out of and for the whole land, it is reason that when part is evicted by an elder title, the donee or lessee should not be charged with the whole rent, but that it should be apportioned rateably according to the value of the land (z).

and there shall be no extinguishment or suspension of rent where the whole is done by agreement, but where the lessor enters injuriously and contrary to the will of the lessee, then there may be a suspension of the rent in part (a); so, if two joint-tenants or co-parceners be on a seignory and one of them disseise the tenant of the land, the other joint-tenant or co-parcener shall distrain for his or her moiety (b), for one co-parcener shall not be prejudiced by the tortious act of the other, (c); so, likewise, a seignory may be suspended by the act of a stranger; so, if a man grant a rent-charge out of two acres, and after the grantee recovers one of the acres against the grantor by a title paramount, the whole rent shall issue out of the other acre, but if the recovery be by a feint title by covin, then the rent is extinct for the whole, because he claims under the grant (d); but a rent-charge is not always wholly extinct where the grantee claims from or under the grantor (e). So, although, if a grantee of a rent-charge purchase parcel of the land, the whole rent-charge is extinct, yet he may release to the tenant a part of the rent and retain part, for in this case he deals only with that which is his own, that is, the rent, and not with the land, as in case of purchase of part (f). So, if a lease be of three acres reserving a rent upon condition, and the reversion is granted of two acres, the rent shall be apportioned by the act of the parties; but the condition is destroyed, because it is entire, and against common right (g).

By act of law. 214. There are several cases where a rent shall be apportioned by act of the law, where it cannot be apportioned by the act of the party, as, in the first place, where the grantee of a rent-charge purchases parcel of the land out of which the rent issues, this being an act of the party, the whole is extinguished (h); but if this parcel descends to the son of the purchaser, the rent-charge shall be apportioned, because it comes to him by course of law (i). So, on the same principle, if a man has issue two daughters, and grant a rent-charge out of his land to one of them, the rent shall be apportioned (k). So, where one leases one acre of borough English and another of gavelkind tenure, by one entire rent, and having issue two sons, dies, the rent shall be apportioned according to the course of descent (l). So, where the reversion devolves upon different classes of representatives of the lessor, as where one seised in fee of Black Acre, and lessee for twenty years of White Acre, leases both by one demise for ten years, rendering an entire rent, and dies, whereupon the reversion of Black Acre descends upon the heir, and that of White Acre goes to the executor, the rent shall be apportioned according to the reversion (m).

So, where a common man is a conusee in a statute merchant or recognisance, and purchases parcel of the land, the whole rent is extinct, but it is otherwise in the case of the Queen, for if she purchases parcel, she shall have execution of the other lands which are in the hands of others (n).

So, again, a rent reserved upon a lease for years shall not be apportioned by the act of the lessor, but otherwise by act of law, as where a tenant makes a feoffment in fee of part of the land, and the lessor enters (o).

But, in respect of the realty only rent is apportionable, for the personalty shall not be divided by act of law; therefore if execution be sued of body and lands upon a statute merchant or staple, and after the inheritance of part of those lands descend to the conusee, all the execution is avoided, for the duty is personal and cannot be divided by act of law (p);

so, where there is a lease of land and a flock of sheep, and after, upon a recognisance made by the lessor, the land is evicted, it was held that there should be no apportionment of the rent, and that the lessee should hold the sheep without any allowance (q); so, where a man leases land of which he is seised in fee, and other land of which he is tenant for life with a power of leasing, and the lease is not well executed according to the power, it was held, that the lease was good after the death of the lessor for the lands in fee, though not for the other lands, for the rent shall be apportioned (r); so, if A. seised of one acre in fee and possessed of another for years, makes a lease of both, reserving one entire rent, and dies, the rent shall be apportioned with the reversion, and the heir and executor shall have his proportion (s); so, if a husband leases for years, reserving rent, and dies, the wife recovers a third part of the reversion, she shall have the same proportion of the rent, for in all these cases the law distributes the rent as it disposes of the reversion. (s) See further, as to the discharge of the tenant in case of eviction, ante, §§ 205, 206.

Other cases of rent apportionable by act of law.

215. There are several other cases where by act of law a rent is apportionable, which would not otherwise be so, as if a moiety of a reversion be extended by elegit, the rent shall be apportioned, and the lessor shall still enjoy half the rent as incident to the reversion that remains in him (t).

By the act of

217. There are some few other cases where the law of apportionment does not apply, or only under certain restrictions, as where the rent-service is something whole and indivisible, as a house, &c., and the lessor purchases part of the land, such rent is wholly extinct, because it cannot be severed or apportioned (v); so, where a man has common of pasture sans nombre in twenty acres of land, and ten of those acres descend to A., the common sans nombre being entire and uncertain cannot be apportioned, sed secus if it had been a common certain as for ten beasts (x); so, if three joint-tenants hold by an entire yearly rent, as of a horse, &c., and the tenants cease for two years, and the lord recovers two parts of the land granted against two of them, and the third saves his part by tender of the rent; although the lord comes to the two parts by lawful recovery, yet the entire rent shall be extinct (y); but if an entire service be pro bono publico, as to repair a bridge or a way and the like, then although the lessor purchases part, yet the service remains (y).

No apportionment where rent-service is entire.

218. Again, there is a diversity between a rent in gross and a rent incident to the reversion, concerning the apportionment thereof, as if a man enfeoff B. of one acre in fee upon condition, and B. being seised of another acre in fee grants a rent out of both acres to the feoffor, who enters into the one acre for the condition broken, the whole rent shall issue out of the other acre, because his title is paramount the grant; but if a man make a lease for life of Black Acre and White Acre, reserving two shillings rent, upon condition that if the lessee does such an act that then he shall have fee in Black Acre, the lessee performs the condition, yet, although by relation he has the fee-simple ab initio, shall the rent be apportioned, for the reversion of one acre whereunto the rent was incident is gone from the lessor (z).

c. Manner of making Apportionment.

By the jury.

219. The making an apportionment is properly the business of a jury, who upon the evidence offered are to judge of the value of the land purchased by the lessor, or aliened by the tenant (a); but if the lessee re-demise part to the lessor reserving a rent, there shall be no apportionment, for the parties by the reservation have ascertained what rent shall be allowed for that part (a); so, if part be assigned by the lessee to a stranger, who assigns it to the lessor, there shall be no apportionment, for the lessor comes under the benefit of the stranger's contract (a).

Upon what pleas.

An apportionment may be made upon a plea of nil debet pleaded by the tenant, because when issue is joined on such plea, it is the business of the jury to determine whether anything and how much is due (a); but the rent cannot be apportioned upon a demurrer because the judges only determine what is the law in the case, but the value of the land never comes in question (a); and where the apportionment is made between the landlord and the purchaser of part of the reversion without the privity of the tenant, he is not bound by it, and may dispute its propriety (b); and consequently the purchaser would, by the conveyance of the vendor without the concurrence of the lessee, not acquire the same rights against the lessee, as he would have acquired if the annual rent had been legally apportioned by the

II. Apportionment in respect of Part of Time.

220. At common law there should never be an apportionment in respect of part of the rent as there should have been upon an eviction of part of the land (e); therefore if a tenant for life died before the day on which the rent became due, his executors could not claim an apportionment of the rent; nor could the remainderman or reversioner claim that part of it which accrued during the life of the tenant for life, so that the tenant paid nothing (f). The 11 G. 2, c. 19, s. 15, has remedied this defect in the law by giving the rent due for the portion of the time that has elapsed of the quarter to the executors and administrators. In order that the rent may be apportionable under the statute, the demise must determine by the death of tenant for life. If the lease be such as to bind the remainderman, then the whole rent goes to him, and there is no apportionment (g). Before the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 22, it was doubtful whether the first statute extended to tenants pur autre vie, or tenants in tail (h); therefore, when an incumbent had leased the glebe and tithes of his living, and the lease expired by his death, the tenant having paid a whole year's rent to the successor, it was held that the executors of the last incumbent was entitled to an apportionment of the rent up to the time of his death (i); and time has been held to be the measure of the apportionment in respect to tithes, as in respect to the profits of the land (k).

§ 221. The means for recovering rent are—1. The remedy by distress; 2. By entry; 3. By action or suit; 4. By statute.

Means of recovering rent.

I. Remedy by Distress.

222. The remedy by distress is by the common law incident to a rent service, but in case of a rent charge it must be expressly provided for by the deed (m). Under this head may be considered—1. Who may distrain; 2. What may be distrained; 3. Manner of making a distress and proceedings thereon; 4. Place where distress is to be made. See further, as to distress, post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL AND THEIR REMEDIES.

the donor or lessor, without any express provision, remedy for such rent or services (n), and this my Lord Coke calls a rent distrainable of common right (o); but if the donor or lessor do not reserve the reversion, he cannot distrain of common right; therefore if a lessee for years assigns his term, reserving to himself a rent, he cannot enforce the payment of such rent by distress, because a rent so reserved was not distrainable for at common law, and not being a rent-seck, it did not fall within the 4 G. 2, c. 28, s. 5, which gives such remedy for a rent-seck (p). So, if termor lease for remainder of term (q), and if a man seised in fee or for life of a rent-charge, after arrearages incur, grant over the rent to another, he cannot distrain for the arrearages, because they are by the grant divided from the freehold (r); but this is to be understood with some exceptions, as in case of rent granted by one coparcener to another for equality of partition, the grantee may distrain of common right, though she has no reversion (s), lest she should be without remedy (t); and so in the case of a donor (t): but a party may reserve to himself a power of distraining (u), and a tenant from year to year underletting from year to year, has a sufficient reversion entitling him to distrain (x).

225. After attornment of the tenants a receiver may distrain in his own name and on his own authority, without any special leave of the court; but before attornment he must distrain in the name of the person having the legal estate (a); and if there be any doubt as to who has the legal estate, the receiver must in that case make application to the court for an order to distrain (b). So, if the owner be in possession, the receiver cannot distrain, but must apply to the court for an order directing the owner to give up possession to the receiver (c); so, if rent be in arrear for more than a year, a receiver cannot distrain without an order of the court (d).

Coparceners are considered in law as but as one heir (e); therefore, they, as a rule, must join in making a distress (f); and one of two coparceners cannot make avowry for a moiety before partition, although they have several inheritances (f); after partition they or their grantees may avow severally (g); so, before partition, one of several coheirs may distrain for rent due to herself and her coheirs, without an express authority from them so to do; and an avowry by her in her own right, and a cognizance as the bailiff of the others, is sufficient, without averring any authority from them to distrain (h); and there is no difference in this respect between coparceners at common law, and parceners by custom, as parceners in gavelkind (h).

ticularly in his own right, and make connuance as bailiff of the others (i); but, as in the case of coparceners, he is not obliged to have any express authority, and if the others merely decline to act, he may proceed to distrain for rent due to all (k).

Tenants in common.

228. Tenants in common must sever in avowry, "because it goes to the realty, and therefore if three tenants in common distrain for thirty beasts, one of them must avow for ten, the other for ten, and the third for ten (l);" and payment of the rent to one tenant is not payment to the other, therefore when a terre-tenant after notice paid the rent to one, it was held that the other might distrain for his share (m), and they may make several distresses; therefore where land was demised by four persons (whose title did not appear) at one entire rent, and one of them distrained for his share, the distress was held to be regular, for whatever might have been the interest of the landlord as between themselves, as between them and the terre-tenant they were tenants in common, and entitled each to a separate distress (n); so, in an early case it had been decided that one tenant in common might take a distress, without his companion, and avow solely (o). But as tenants in common have a joint action for rent, it being in the personalty and not in the realty (p), it has therefore been held that the survivor of two tenants in common may distrain for the whole of the rent, although the reservation be to the lessors according to their respective interests (q).

Tenants in tail,
&c.

230. At common law if a husband seised in fee, or in tail in right of his wife of a rent-charge, did not recover during his wife's life arrears which became due previously to their marriage, he could not after her death compel payment of them; but now, by the 32 H. 8, c. 37, he or his personal representatives may distrain for the same (s); and it seems that copyhold lands charged with a rent are within the provisions of the act (t); it seems however that leases for years are not within the statute (u), but if the wife's term be demised for years, the reversion is then in the husband, and he may distrain (x).

right of wife.

231. A mortgagee after giving notice of the mortgage to the tenant in possession, is entitled to rent in arrear at the time of the notice, and to what accrues due afterwards, and may distrain for the same, if the lease under which the tenant holds have been made before the mortgage (y); but where the lease has been made by the mortgagor alone after the mortgage, then the mortgagee has no remedy but by ejectment, and cannot distrain (z); and a mere recognition by the mortgagee of the tenant in possession as his tenant will not enable him to distrain (a).

Annuitant.

Where an annuity is granted out of an estate, and the grantor, to secure the payment, vests the estate in trustees for a term to the use of the annuitant, the latter may distrain for the arrears (b).

Guardians, &c.

Committee of lunatics.

232. As a guardian may make leases of the infant's land in his own name, so he may like other persons distrain in his own name (c). Committees of lunatics, like receivers, must act under the directions of the Court of Chancery. See Bradby on Distresses, by Serjeant Adams, 62; Shelford on the Law of Lun. 180.

Executors.

233. At common law the personal representatives of a man seised of a rent in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life, could not distrain for arrears of rent incurred in the lifetime of a testator or intestate, but this power was given to them by the 32 H. 8, c. 37; but the statute applies only to cases where the owner of the rent, if he had lived, might have distrained, and therefore when the rent was in arrear, and the owner had granted away his interest before his death, his executor was held to have no remedy for such arrearages (d). If a man made a lease for life or a gift in tail reserving a rent, this was a rent-service within the statute, but it was doubtful, whether if a person, seised in fee of lands, made a lease for years, reserving rent, his executor or administrator could not under this statute have distrained for arrears of rent incurred in his lifetime; and in the case of Prescott v. Boucher (e) it was decided in the negative, but by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, s. 37, executors and administrators are authorized in such cases to distrain. See Dig. P. The queen may reserve a rent out of a franchise or matter incorporeal as well as out of lands, and may distrain for it on any other lands of the tenant not subject to the rent, but not in such other lands of the tenant as are let by tenant, or extended; and by the 22 C. 2, c. 6, the grantee of a farm rent has the same power of distress as the queen had (g).

The Crown.

b. What Things may be distrained, or otherwise.

235. As a rule, all the moveable chattels of a tenant may be distrained for rent-arrear, but to this rule there are many exceptions and on various grounds, yet such exceptions are fewer now than formerly.

General rule.

Exceptions.

First. A thing to be distrainable must be something in which a man can have a valuable property, and therefore it is said in the books that there can be no distress of dogs, deer, conies, and all other animals feræ naturæ; but this rule is held to be too general, for as to dogs, "it is clear now that a man may have a valuable property in a dog; trover has been several times brought for a dog, and great damages have been recovered (h)," and the legislature has made it penal to steal dogs. See Dig. P. i. tit. LARCENY.

Things of no value.

Dogs, &c.

As to deer it has been expressly decided that when kept in an inclosed ground for the purposes of sale or profit they may be distrained (i).

Deer.

236. In the next place, things fixed to the freehold, as doors, windows, and the like, are not distrainable; for what is part of the freehold cannot be severed from it without detriment to the thing itself in the removal, and as distresses were considered as pledges, which were to be restored to the owner in statu quo, such things once removed, could not have been so restored. Besides, what is fixed to the freehold is part of the thing demised, and the nature of a distress was not to resume part of the thing itself for the rent, but only the inducta and illata upon the soil or house (k).

On this principle an anvil in a smith's shop, and a millstone in a mill are privileged from distress, and a temporary removal of the anvil out of the stock, or the millstone out of the mill, for the purpose of its being picked, does not destroy the privilege (l). So, for the like reason, corn growing was before the 11 G. 2, c. 19 (see Dig. P. II. tit. DISTRESS) not distrainable, and so trees, shrubs, and plants growing in a nursery ground cannot be distrained (m); in this latter case the exemption is in favour of trade, see infra, § 239.

Cattle.

237. Cattle on a common were not distrainable before the 11 G. 2, c. 19 (n); but cattle of a stranger trespassing on the land of the tenant may be distrained, although the owner make fresh suit and the cattle be not levant and couchant (o); so, a lessor cannot distrain a stranger's cattle, which get into the land whence the rent issues, through defect of fences which either the landlord or the tenant is bound to repair (p).

Cattle within view of the landlord.

If the landlord come to distrain, and the tenant, seeing him, drive the cattle off the land, the landlord may follow the beasts, and distrain them out of the premises if he had once a view of the cattle on his land; but if the beasts go off the land of themselves, he cannot distrain them afterwards (q), though if the distrainer once enter the premises

Cattle which are upon the land by way of agisting may also be distrained for rent (s); so, where beasts were put into a field to graze for the night, it was held that the landlord might distrain them for rent due out of the lands where they were put, although they had been put in with his consent, such consent not being deemed a waiver of his right to distrain unless it had been so expressly agreed, and being but a parol agreement, it could not alter the original contract between the lessor and lessee, from which the power to distrain arose (t); but the owner of the cattle was afterwards relieved in equity on the ground of fraud in the landlord, who had consented to their being put in, that he might distrain them (u).

Cattle agisting.

238. Again, beasts of the plough and implements of husbandry and tools by which a man gains his livelihood are not distrainable; but these are only conditionally exempt, the former, if there are other moveable chattels to the amount of the rent and expenses (x); the latter, if they are in actual use, and there is sufficient distress, as in the case of a stocking-frame (y), or a loom (z); but where a threshing-machine was not in use, and there was not evidence of other goods being on the premises, this was held not to be privileged from distress (a).

inns.

For the same reason things at an inn are privileged from distress, more especially as inns are places devoted to the public service (f); but the things must be actually within the premises of the inn to be so privileged, and not removed to some distant place for the convenience of the innkeeper, and therefore a race-horse, in a stable belonging to an innkeeper a mile distant from the inn, was held not exempt from distress (f); so, a livery stable-keeper is not privileged like an innkeeper, and therefore a chariot standing at a livery stable might be distrained (g).

the goods were no longer under the protection of the law, and might be distrained (l); so, if goods remain on the demised premises after a fictitious sale made under a fraudulent execution, they are liable to the landlord's distress (m); so, corn in the blade, taken and sold under a fi. fa., afterwards continuing on the premises before any rent was due, might be distrained, as it seems, for rent subsequently due (n). Sheaves of corn before the 2 W. & M. (see Dig. P. II. tit. On what days in the year.

As rent is not due until the last minute of the natural day on which it is payable (x), it follows, that a distress for rent-arrear cannot be made on that day (y).

At the common law, if a lease was made at Michaelmas for a year, reserving rent on the feasts of the Annunciation and St. Michael, the lessor was deprived of his remedy by distress for the rent due at Michaelmas, because he could not distrain at the expiration of the term (z); but if by the custom of the country or by express stipulation between the parties, the rent be payable on the day on which the tenant enters, the landlord may distrain for it on that day (a); and so it seems by the usage of a parish, a quarter's rent may be distrained for before the end of the quarter (b): and by the 8 A. c. 14, s. 6, the landlord may distrain for such arrears within six months after the determination of the term. See Dig. P. II. tit. DISTRESS, P. III. tit. LANDLORD AND TENANT. And where by the custom of the country a tenant may leave his away-going crop in the barns, it has been held that the landlord may distrain after six months have expired from the determination of the term (c); and where the tenant dies before the expiration of the term and his personal representative continues in possession during the remainder of the term, the landlord may distrain within six months after the end of the term for rent due for the whole term (d); and the statute applies to cases only in which the tenancy has been determined by lapse of time, or perhaps by notice to quit, and not to cases where it has been put an end to by the wrongful disclaimer of the tenant (e).

d. Place where Distress may be made, or otherwise.

243. The distress must be made upon the land from which the rent issues, and therefore where the exclusive use of the land of the river Thames opposite and in front of a wharf, between high and low water mark, as well when covered with water as dry, for the accommodation of the tenants of the wharf, was demised as appurtenant to the wharf, but the land itself between high and low water was not demised, it was held that the lessor could not distrain for rent-arrear, barges, the property of the tenant, lying in the space between high and low water mark, and attached to the wharf by ropes (g). Upon the land.

244. If the lord distrains out of his fee, in land not holden of him, the tenant may make rescous unless in special cases (h); but the queen by her prerogative may distrain upon other land than her own, and is especially excepted by a clause in the Statute of Marlbridge (i). So, if the lord come to distrain within his fee, and the tenant seeing him, drive the cattle off the land, then the lord may follow the beasts and distrain them out of the premises, if he had once a view of the cattle on his land (j); but if the lord had no view of the cattle within his fee, though the tenant drive them off purposely, or if the cattle of themselves after the view go off the land, or if the tenant after the view remove Distraining out of the fee.

A landlord is prima facie liable for the act of the bailiff if he conduct the distress irregularly, unless he repudiates the act as soon as he is made acquainted with it (d); and to justify the landlord in calling in the aid of a police officer, he must shew that he had reason to apprehend violence (e).

At common law a man might have driven a distress whither he pleased (m), but this evil was remedied first by the Statute of Marlbridge prohibiting a distress to be driven out of the county; afterwards, still further, by the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 112; 11 G. 2, c. 19, s. 8; and 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 59, see Dig. P. II. tit. Sale of the

249. At the common law distresses for rent-arrear could not be sold, but only detained as pledges for enforcing the payment of such rent; but the 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, provides that at the expiration of five days after notice of distress to the tenant, and no replevy of the same, the distrainer may cause the same to be appraised and sold. Under this Act it has been held, that five times twenty-four hours must elapse before the sale (s); so, the five days are reckoned inclusive of the day of sale (t), and a reasonable time after the expiration of the five days is allowed to the landlord for appraising and selling the goods (u); but if they remain longer, without the tenant's consent, distrainer will be deemed a trespasser (x); so, if the goods be not sold after the five days, the tenant may replevy them, for at common law the distress was at all times replevisable (y). On other points of construction of this and the other statutes relating to distresses, see Dig. P. II. tit. DISTRESS; and as to the forms of notices, and other forms of proceeding in distresses, see 2 Prec. in Conv. tit. On the same principle that distresses were pledges, the distrainer was not and still is not at liberty to deal with a distress as his own, therefore he cannot make use of the distress, as to work a horse and the like, and it was even thought that he could not do anything for the owner's benefit, as to milk a cow, without his consent (z); but this was never settled as law (a); yet it has been held, that

So, if a man distrains dead goods, as utensils of a house or such like, which may take damage by wet or weather and the like, he ought to impound them in a house or other pound covert within the proper distance, as prescribed by the 1 & 2 Ph. & M. (c); for if he impound them in a pound overt he ought to answer for them (d). If a man distrains cattle and puts them in a pound overt, it was said the owner ought to keep them at his peril, for it was lawful for him to come there for this purpose; but if put in a pound covert or close, there the distrainer ought to keep them at his peril, and yet he should not have any satisfaction for it (e).

II. Remedy by Entry.

251. At common law there was a material difference between the remedy by distress, and the remedy by re-entry, for in the case of distress for non-payment of rent, no previous demand of the rent in arrear was necessary; but where the remedy was by re-entry, there must have been an actual demand made previous to the entry, and all the formalities in making the demand as to time, place, amount of rent and other particulars, must have been strictly observed (f); unless by consent of the parties the previous demand was dispensed with, for by "special consent of the parties re-entry may be for default of payment of rent without demand of it (g);" and a proviso in a deed for re-entry for non-payment of rent, "although no demand thereof should be lawfully made," has been held in more than one case to dispense with any demand at all (h); and this clause is commonly inserted in leases and annuity deeds.

c. 28.

In order to obviate the difficulties which attended making such demand, it is provided by the 4 G. 2, c. 28, that where one half year's rent is in arrear,⁽ⁱ⁾ and the landlord has right by law to re-enter for non-payment, he may without any formal demand or re-entry serve a declaration in ejectment (i); but the statute dispenses with the demand of the rent in those cases only where there is not a sufficient distress, as well as six months' rent in arrear, it is therefore still necessary for the lessor to comply with all the formalities of the common law, before he can proceed on a clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent, if a sufficient distress can be found (k); but an insertion in the proviso of the lease, that the right of re-entry shall accrue upon the rent being "lawfully demanded," will not since this statute make a demand necessary, if there be no sufficient distress (l); and if a landlord is prevented by a tenant from entering, he may recover under the statute without shewing that there was actually no sufficient distress (m).

Nomine pænæ.

252. The same formalities are required in recovering a nomine pænæ (n), which is not considered so much a remedy for the recovery of rent, as a penalty to oblige the tenant to a punctual payment; and this as well of a rent-charge as a rent-service (o), and it seems that there must be a demand as well of the penalty as of the rent (p), therefore if it be granted, that, if the rent be in arrear, the tenant shall forfeit 8s. a-day as a nomine pænæ, there must be an actual demand of the rent at the day to give a title to the penalty, because, until demand made, it cannot appear that there was any default (p); and if a lessor avows for rent and a nomine pænæ, and the rent was not demanded, so that the nomine pænæ

III. Remedy by Action.

253. The remedy by action may be either by action of debt, or action for use and occupation, besides the remedy given to landlords by statute in case of execution (r).

At common law the remedy by action of debt extended only to rents reserved on leases for years, but did not affect freehold rents (s), therefore it did not lie for the arrears of a rent in fee, in tail or for life, so long as the estate of freehold had continuance (t); so, if a lessee for life of a rent acknowledged a statute, and afterwards leased to the tenant, and then the conusee extended, the latter should not have debt for the rent, though his interest was but a chattel; for as to him the freehold, out of which it was derived, had continuance (u); so it was in case of a rent-charge, for if a man were seised of it in fee, and it was in arrear, he could have no action of debt for the arrears (x). But this rule in respect of a rent-service extended only to arrears incurred during the continuance of the life; for if lessee for life died, the lessor might have an action of debt for the arrears, because the land was no longer a security for the rent (y); in the case however of a rent-charge it appears that there was not the same remedy, for if a man seised of a rent-charge in fee died, neither his heir nor executors could have an action for the recovery of such arrears; but now by 8 A. c. 14, s. 4, this defect in the law is supplied by giving the tenant for life the same remedy for any arrears of rent during the continuance of his estate, as the lessee for years enjoyed at common law; but this statute applies only to the case of rent due from a tenant to a landlord, and does not extend to an annuity or yearly rent devised to A. and payable during the life of B. out of lands devised by the same will to B., and therefore during the continuance of the estate of freehold in the rent, an action of debt does not lie by A. against B. for the arrears (z).

Executors and administrators.

254. By the 32 H. 8, c. 37, the personal representatives of a man seised of a rent-service, rent-charge, or rent-seck, either in fee simple, or fee tail, or for term of lives, have now a double remedy given them for arrears of rent, either by action of debt or by distress; the action of debt lies not only against the tenant that ought to have paid the rent, but against his executors and administrators, and the distress runs with the land as long as it continues in the tenant's possession that suffered the rent to run in arrear, or any other person claiming by or from him (a); and the statute has been held to extend as well to the executors of tenant for his own life, as to executors of tenant pur autre vie (b); although this enlarged construction was not at first admitted (c): it seems also doubtful whether this statute extends to cases of arrears due on leases for years, since the statute specifies only tenants in fee simple, fee tail, and for lives, of rents, &c. (d). See further on the construction of this statute Dig. P. II. EXECUTORS.

At common law if there had been tenant for life of a rent and he died, the rent being in arrear, his personal representatives had an action of debt for the arrears (e); but if before the 11 G. 2, c. 19, s. 15, and the 4 & 5 W. 4, c.

or person coming into possession of lands by collusion with the tenant, and holding over after determination of the term, and after demand and notice for delivering possession, is made liable to pay double the yearly value of the land, for the recovery of which an action of debt is given; but it has been held that a person holding over under a fair claim of right is not within this act, although it be decided eventually that he has no right (f); but although according to the order of the words in the act it should seem that the notice ought to be given after the determination of the term, yet if given before it has been held sufficient (g), the law being remedial in favour of landlords (h); and on this ground it was held, that when a woman had received notice to quit, and before the expiration of the tenancy married, it was not necessary to make a demand upon the husband in order to entitle the landlord to recover the double value (i). But this statute has also been considered penal, and therefore that it ought to be construed strictly, and cannot be extended to the case of a tenant from week to week (k).

Where the demise is for a time certain, as for one year, and no longer, a notice to quit is not necessary at the expiration of the year, to put an end to the tenancy; but a demand of possession is necessary to entitle the landlord to double value, and the demand may be made after the determination of the term, but the landlord will be entitled to double value only from the time of the notice and demand (l). See further on the construction of this statute, Dig. P. II. tit. EJECTMENT.

covered in the same manner as single rent, that is by distress, which is one point of distinction between the provision in this statute and that for the double value in 4 G. 2 (m); so, a tenant by parol demise from year to year is within this statute, and liable to pay double rent on holding over (m); so, if he gives parol notice (m); so, there must be some fixed time specified in the tenant's notice to quit, a notice that a tenant will quit as soon as he can get another situation, is not sufficient to render him liable for double rent (n); and the notice must be such a one as would be binding on the tenant, so that the landlord might maintain ejectment (o).

Under the 4 G. 2, an action may be supported after a recovery of the premises in ejectment, there being no incongruity in bringing the two actions, for the action of ejectment is to recover the possession, and the action for double value is to indemnify the landlord for the wrong in holding over (p); but it is otherwise in the case of a claim for double rent under the 11 G. 2, for this statute gives the landlord a right to distrain for it, which is a remedy applicable only to the relation of landlord: upon this statute therefore there would be an incongruity in applying the remedy for double rent after an action of ejectment which treats the person in possession as a trespasser (q). See further on the construction of this statute, Dig. P. II. tit. EJECTMENT; and on the action of debt for recovery of rent, see post, § 253.

257. Before the 11 G. 2, c. 19, s. 14, which gives the landlord an action on the case for use and occupation as a reasonable satisfaction for the lands, tenements, or hereditaments held by the tenant, an action of assumpsit would lie on a promise to pay a sum of money in consideration of a permission to occupy lands (r); but as this is a real contract for which assumpsit will not lie, this difficulty was got rid of by considering the sum to be paid as a compensation due on the contract and not as rent, and the permission to occupy as not amounting to a demise; for a plaintiff would have been nonsuited, if he produced in evidence in such action any parol demise or agreement with a reservation of rent (s). Under this statute the landlord who has rent owing to him is allowed to recover, not the rent but an equivalent for the rent; and if the demise be produced against him, it shall not defeat his action as it would have done before the statute (t).

Regularly this action lies where there is no demise or agreement under seal; but in one case where a defendant held under an agreement which did not amount to a demise, it was decided that the action for use and occupation was maintainable, although the agreement was by deed; where there has been an actual occupation, the action lies in respect of an incorporeal hereditament (u); so, where there had been occupation under an agreement to take a lease of certain minerals, it was held not to be a mere licence, but a right constituting an hereditament within the 11 G. 2 (x); so, where a lease for years expired at Midsummer and the tenant refused to give up possession, insisting that he was entitled to have notice to quit, and afterwards continued in possession until Christmas, and paid rent to that time, when he tendered the keys of the premises to the landlord, which the latter refused to take; this was adjudged not to be a holding over, but conclusive evidence of a tenancy from year to year, which enabled the landlord to maintain use and occupation for a quarter's rent due at Lady-Day (y);

so, rent may be recovered in this action, notwithstanding the building has been burnt down (z); so, the landlord may support this action against the original tenant, although the premises are in the occupation of an under-tenant (a); but if lands are let to A., and B. agree with the landlord to stand in A.'s place and pay rent, the landlord may afterwards sue B. for use and occupation, and B. cannot set up A.'s title as a defence to the action (b); so, this action will lie where a party has continued in possession after the expiration of his term (c); unless there be a new agreement by the landlord to accept another person as tenant in his stead (c), and if the premises are in the possession of an under-tenant, the landlord may refuse to accept the possession, and hold the original lessee liable (d); so, before the 6 G. 4, c. 16, this action lay against a tenant notwithstanding his bankruptcy (e).

not lie.

258. As to the cases to which this action does not apply, if a landlord accept of an under-tenant and distrain upon him for rent, he cannot afterwards proceed for use and occupation against the original tenant (f); so, where lands have been let to one who underlets to others, and the latter receive notice to quit from the original landlord and one does in consequence quit, and the lands occupied by him remain unlet for a year, and are then let by the original tenant, the original landlord cannot recover in use and occupation for the rents of the unoccupied premises, as such circumstances amount to an eviction (g); so, if the tenant, with the landlord's consent, quit in the middle of a quarter, the landlord cannot recover for the whole quarter, nor pro ratâ for that part of it during which the occupation continued (h).

So, although executors and administrators cannot as a rule reject the term of their testator or intestate, yet where an administrator has merely taken possession of the premises and tried to let, but has made no profit of them, he cannot be charged for use and occupation (i); so, this action is not maintainable against a husband alone, if his wife held under a yearly tenancy before marriage, the rent being payable half-yearly, where part of such rent was due from the wife dum sola, and the remainder accrued after the coverture (k); so, this action will not lie, where the title is in dispute, for the Courts will not try title by such an action (l).

This action is founded on contract and does not apply to an adverse or tortious holding; therefore the plaintiff, after recovery in ejectment of the premises, may recover in this action the rent up to the time of the demise in the ejectment, but not subsequently (m); so, the holding must be under a contract of demise, therefore where a party was let into possession under a contract to purchase and the vendor failed to make a title, it was held that the vendor could not recover for use and occupation (n).

The remedy in this action is not co-extensive with the action of debt for rent; the statute only furnishes an easy remedy in cases of actual occupation, leaving other more complicated cases to their ordinary remedy (o). Debt also lies for use and occupation, and is frequently substituted for the old action of debt for rent. This action of debt however is independent of the statute (p).

SECTION V.

ANNUITIES OR RENT-CHARGES.

Definition.

§ 259. An annuity, properly so called, is a yearly sum of money granted to another in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life or years, charging the person of the grantor only. Where however it is made payable out of lands, and the land is charged, as it usually is, with distress for payment of the same, it is called a rent-charge; but if both the person and estate be made liable, as they most commonly are, then it is generally called an annuity (s).

Corody or pension.

A corody or pension was an allowance or a right belonging to the crown to receive from the bishops a maintenance for his chaplains until they obtained a benefice, a right the exercise of which as it appears has fallen into disuse (t). A corody so far savoured of the realty that a house or land might be appendant to it (u).

The subject of annuities embraces the following matters entitled to notice:—1. How an annuity is granted or created; 2. The estates in an annuity and the incidents thereto; 3. Apportionment of an annuity; 4. Recovery of an annuity.

§ 260. Where an annuity is made chargeable upon the lands of the grantor, it may be made, as a rent-charge, by bargain and sale, release, or any other conveyance now in use (see ante, § 159, as to how a rent-charge generally may be created); but if a man grants an annuity to another, and does not say for him and his heirs, this is determined by the death of the grantor (x); sed secus of the grant of rent out of land, or a grant of a rent whereof a man is seised, because this charges the land and an annuity charges the person only, and cannot be limited to the heir except by express words (y). By what conveyances.

261. In some cases where the grant of a rent is void as rent, yet it may be good as an annuity; as, if a rent be granted to be received out of an acre of land in A. and the grantor has no lands in A. yet this is a good annuity (z); so, if a man grants a rent of £20 to be received out of a rent of £40, this though not good as a rent, because a rent cannot issue out of a rent, yet is good as an annuity (a). Where annuity is not rent.

262. By the last annuity act, 53 G. 3, c. 141, s. 10, annuities or rent-charges given by will or marriage-settlement, or for the advancement of a child, and also such as are secured upon freehold, or copyhold, or customary lands in Great Britain or Ireland, or in any of Her Majesty's possessions beyond the seas, of equal or greater value than the annuity, over and Annuities under the 53 G. 3, c. 141.

§ 263. An annuity may be granted in fee, that is, as a conditional or qualified fee, but it cannot be entailed, being in point of charge strictly personal (b); therefore a remainder cannot be limited over of it, as it may of a rent-charge (c), except in a grant by the queen (d); but when granted to one and the heirs of his body, if the condition is performed by the grantee's having issue, the estate becomes absolute in him, and alienable without restriction; and this it seems, though the grantee never come into actual possession (e).

An annuity in fee granted by the Crown out of the £4½ per cent. duties payable for exports and imports at Barbadoes, has been held not to be rent or realty but merely a personal inheritance (f), but, being settled on A. and the heirs of her body, was a fee-simple conditional (f); so, an annuity charged upon the Post-Office, until a certain sum should be paid, in order to be laid out in land, continues to be mere personalty, and as such passes by grant or trans-

263. Although an annuity in fee is an hereditament and as such is forfeitable for treason (i), yet being only personal it is not an hereditament within the Mortmain Act (k); so, before the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries' Act, it was not the subject of a fine or recovery, being passed by mere grant or transfer (l); so, an annuity is not within the Statute of Frauds so far as it affects real property (m); so, it is not assets in the hands of the heir, because not comprised within the description either of lands or tenements; nor in the hands of executors, because its inheritable quality prevents it from going to them (n).

Is not assets.

Whether an annuity was assignable or grantable over was for some time doubtful, because it was looked upon to be merely a chose in action (o), but it has since been ruled otherwise (p); and in Gerard v. Boden (q), it was said that an annuity was not so much in the personalty as hath been argued; so, it seems too that naming assigns is not essential to the making of an annuity assignable (r).

Common appendant, &c.

Common appendant is a right annexed to the possession of land, by which the owner thereof is entitled to feed his beasts or take wood, &c. Common appurtenant does not arise from any connexion of tenure, but must be claimed by grant or prescription; common in gross is a right not annexed to land, but annexed to the person, and must be claimed by grant or prescription; and common because of vicinage where the inhabitants of two townships have usually intercommoned with each other. All these distinctions are applicable to common of pasture, but to common of estovers and the others they apply only in a partial degree.

To what land.

It must be regularly appendant to arable land only, yet it may be claimed as appendant to a manor farm, a ploughland or a carve of land, though it may contain pasture, meadow, and wood, for it shall be presumed to have been all originally arable land, though afterwards converted into pasture, meadow, and wood (l); but it cannot be appendant to land which is improved within time of memory out of the waste of the lord (m).

280. In other respects these two kinds of common agree. The number of cattle may be limited or unlimited (s). When common appurtenant is granted for an unlimited number of cattle, the measure of profit which the commoner may enjoy is to be regulated by the number of cattle levant and couchant upon the land entitled to common, as in the case of common appendant (t); and where a man claims common for all commonable cattle but does not say levant and couchant, this shall be intended commons sans nombre, according to the words (u); but although this prescription be bad on demurrer yet held to be cured after verdict (x).

There is no less diversity in the periods for using common appurtenant than for common appendant; a man may prescribe for it generally without mentioning any particular season of the year (y); or the prescription may be for every year from the time of cutting and carrying away until the field was re-sown (z); and where such is the prescription, and the land was not sown for seven years, held Burgagers in a borough may have common appurtenant to their burgages by prescription (c); so, for beasts levant and couchant in their vill (d); but an inhabitant of a town shall not have this common by reason of his commorancy in an ancient messuage, not having any interest in the house, for this is neither common appendant or appurtenant, or in gross or because of vicarage, for common such as this would be transitory and uncertain (e); yet he may have it in a place where such right attaches, provided the cattle be levant and couchant (f); and so it seems that in general inhabitants may claim by custom although they cannot prescribe; sed quære (g).

Freemen may prescribe in respect of ancient messuages, for they may be taken to include land on which their cattle may be levant and couchant (h). So, it seems that a copyholder may prescribe for common for a limited number of cattle in land parcel of a manor, and this will be common appurtenant, and being a copyhold grant, it still remained attached to the manor, even during the time of its being enjoyed by the copyholder (i).

Definition.

§ 294. Common of estovers is the right of taking necessary wood from the land of another; and, like common of pasture, it is of different kinds, and is entitled to notice as to the mode of claiming it, the persons who may enjoy it, the things to be taken, the time of taking, and the user.

Different kinds.

Common of estovers may be distinguished into the following kinds, namely, house-bote, that is wood for the necessary repairs of the house; fire-bote, or wood for consuming as fuel in the house; plough-bote, or wood for the repair of ploughs and other implements of husbandry; cart-bote, for the repair of carts and waggons; and hay or hedge-bote, for the repair of hedges or fences.

Appendant or appurtenant.

This kind of common is either appendant or appurtenant, as if a man grants to another estovers for the repair of a certain house, then the right becomes appurtenant to that house (n); and it must be claimed in respect of ancient premises (o); and it has been frequently decided that none but ancient premises can have a right to this common, and if a man have such a common by grant he cannot build new houses and entitle himself to common in respect of them (p); so, not in the case of new hedges (q); so, if he convert the premises to other purposes he cannot claim estovers (r); but if a house having such a right attached to it be pulled down, and rebuilt on the same or another place, the prescription is not thereby destroyed (s); and so if a house be enlarged or more chimneys built, the estovers shall remain to the old house (t).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-

295. This right can be claimed by grant or prescription only; and if a grant be shewn, then it will be held appurtenant, and it may be prescribed for as such (x); and if it be appendant it is of common right, and may be pleaded without alleging a prescription (y). If therefore a man will entitle himself to fire-bote, he ought to state his occupation of a house to which the liberty of taking fuel is attached (z); so, where the prescription was for all the thorns growing on a particular spot appurtenant to a messuage and an acre of land, provided they were used on the land on which they grew, this was held sufficient, without claiming in respect of an ancient messuage (a).

How claimed.

By grant or prescription.

As a common of estovers is a profit à prendre, and cannot therefore as a rule be claimed by custom, for a custom to take a profit in alieno solo has been holden to be bad, such a right can only be claimed by prescription (b); and therefore a custom for all the poor householders to take estovers from the waste of another cannot be established (c); but copyholders are an exception to this rule, see infra § 296.

Not by custom.

Not inhabitants. But inhabitants as such cannot prescribe; they can substantiate such a right only by others, as a mayor and burgesses pleading it for themselves and the inhabitants of such a place (g).

What may be taken.
Underwood. 297. The commoner, in this case, is as a rule entitled to take only underwood, and loppings, &c., but there may be prescriptions more enlarged, as to cut willows for the repair of the house (h); and in the case of fire-bote, grants have been construed to give liberty to take great wood, such as oaks, &c., where small wood is not to be had (i); but the grantee can only take the wood he cuts himself, not that which is already cut (k); if therefore the grantor cut down all the wood, the only remedy for the grantee is an action on the case (k). The taking must in all cases be reasonable (l).

HEREDITA-

299. It is an invariable rule that estovers must be spent upon the premises which give the right to take them (p); and if to be used for repairs, they cannot be appropriated to any other purpose (q); and this privilege, being once attached to a house, cannot afterwards be severed from it, therefore, if the owner of the house grant the estovers to another reserving the house to himself, or the house to another reserving the estovers to himself, the estovers shall not thereby be severed from the house, because they must be spent thereon (r). On the same principle, if a man be seised of a house in right of his wife, and another grants to the husband and wife sufficient estovers to be burnt in that house, the estovers are appurtenant thereto, and shall descend to the issue of the husband and wife (s); and so, if one has a house on the part of his mother, and competent house-bote be granted to him, to be burnt in the same house, this is appurtenant to the house, and although it be a new purchase, yet it shall go with the house to the heir of the part of the mother (t); and whoever after acquires the house, shall have such common of estovers (u).

How used.

To be spent in or upon the house.

Cannot be severed.

For the same reason that the estovers cannot be used for any other than the purpose for which they were granted, they can in no case be sold (x); so, the estovers can be used only for the repair of the house, in respect of which they were granted (y), or for rebuilding it if destroyed (y), but

What it is.

§ 300. Common of turbary is the right to dig turf upon another's land or upon the lord's waste. This, like the other rights, may be either appendant or appurtenant (b); so, also, it may be in gross (c); but it cannot be appendant to land, because turves are to be spent in the house (d). And if it be appurtenant to a house, it will pass in a grant of the house (e).

Extent of the right.

This liberty is more ample than common of pasture, which is only a right of feeding on the herbage and vesture of the soil, as it renews annually, but this is a right of carrying away the soil itself. To this is nearly allied another common; namely, the liberty of digging for coals, stones, and minerals (f). The manner of claiming this right, the persons entitled to enjoy it and the manner in which it may be enjoyed, are the subjects which enter into the consideration of this common.

How this common may be claimed.

It must be claimed by grant or prescription in all cases, except where it is claimed by a copyholder, who should allege a custom (g).

301. In respect to the parties entitled, or otherwise, to this right, there is no distinction between this and other rights of common; it has been held that a mere occupant cannot have a right to carry away the soil of the lord, and, consequently, that the custom was bad which was laid to exist in such a person (h).

Persons entitled to enjoy this right or otherwise.

So, likewise, a mere inhabitant as such cannot have this right; but it seems that a mayor and burgesses may prescribe to have it for themselves and the inhabitants of such a place (i). So, a freeman may plead a custom to take turves or dig for slates or limestones for his own use (h).

Not mere occupant.

Copyholders may also claim this common by custom, but the custom must be certain and definite, or the claim cannot be established (l).

302. This right may be limited, as the other rights of common before mentioned; but where a replication, stating a right of turbary, was objected to, because the plaintiff did not entitle himself to take turves in a certain inclosed part of the common, and common of turbary did not extend throughout the whole waste as common of pasture does, held, "that a man may have common of turbary throughout the whole common, as well as common of pasture, though he cannot enjoy his right of common of turbary in those parts of the common where there are no turves, any more than he can enjoy his common of pasture in those parts of the common where there is no grass."—Per Willes, C. J. (m).

Not restricted as to place where taken.

303. Common of turbary, like common of estovers, must be used for no other than the purpose for which it was intended, namely, to be spent on the premises. A liberty therefore to dig turf does not extend to a right to dig for

IV. Common of Piscary.

§ 304. What it is.

§ 304. Not otherwise distinguished from other Commons.

What it is.

§ 304. Common of piscary is the liberty to fish in another man's fish-pond, pool, or river. This is distinguished from a common, free and several fishery, see ante, § 108.

Appendant,
&c.

This common, like the others, may be appendant, appurtenant, or in gross. In an early case, where a defendant justified as having a common of fishing in the place where &c. appendant to a certain house, his plea was held good (q); but such a right can be claimed only in private rivers or waters; for there can be no prescription for a common of fishery in the sea as appurtenant to certain messuages, for a right to fish in the sea is common to all the queen's subjects (r).

In gross.

So, there may be a common of fishery in gross; for a fishery may either be granted exclusively to one, in which case it seems to be properly a several fishery, (see ante, § 108), or it may be granted to one in common with others; and if it be attached to the person in contradistinction to appendancy or appurtenancy, it is properly a common in gross, and so it was held to be in an early case (s); and so, it was said that the royal fishery of the Banne was not appurtenant, but a fishery in gross (t).

§ 305. Common in a forest is the taking of accustomed herbage and other things from the soil of another within the forest (u). This, like other commonable rights, is either appendant, appurtenant, or in gross (v). This right was reserved by an express clause in the Charter of the Forest, to all persons who should be in the enjoyment of common in lands or woods, that might thereafter be afforested. See Dig. P. I. tit. FORESTS.

Definition.

Common appendant and appurtenant can be claimed only in respect of land within a forest; therefore, where a prescription was made for common in a forest, and it appeared that the place had been disafforested, but the special verdict did not find that it had been made forest again, on that ground judgment was given against the claimant (x); and this is in accordance with the 33 E. 1, stat. 5, Ordinatio FORESTS), it has been held that the commoner is not necessarily excluded from his common by reason of such inclosure (y).

What may be taken.

306. Besides herbage and estovers generally, which are the proper subjects of commonable rights in a forest, there is one kind of estovers called pannage, consisting of acorns, beech mast, and the like, which may be more especially claimed there, and that too notwithstanding they are the food of swine, and that regularly swine have no place to common in a forest (z).

Time of taking.

The time of taking common in the forest is regulated not only by the forest laws, but by several Acts of Parliament, as the 20 C. 2, c. 3, for the preservation of timber in the Forest of Dean, and the 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 36, for the preservation of timber in the New Forest. The rights of the commoners are restricted by the crown being enabled to inclose considerable parts of it, and it has been held under this latter statute that the right of common in the inclosed parts is restrained absolutely, during the period of inclosure, but continued in the uninclosed parts under certain restrictions (a).

Fence month.

By Manwood it is said that commonable cattle only, according to the forest, can be put on the common during the fence month (b); but a prescription to have common for cattle in the forest at all times of the year, without excepting the fence month, has been held good (c).

These drifts are said to be when all the cattle, as well of commoners as of strangers, are driven by the officers of the forest to some certain inclosed place, and the object of them is to see whether the commoners common with such cattle as they ought; also, that they do not surcharge the forest; and also, that there be no cattle of any stranger commoning there (f).

at will, is not sufficient (g); but it is said that the user by tenant at will would (before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 36, abolishing the remedy by assize), have given such a seisin to him in the reversion that he might have had an assize, if he or his tenants had been ousted or disturbed (h).

How acquired.

A user of borrowed cattle will it seems enable a commoner to acquire a seisin, if he have not sufficient cattle of his own, and borrows for the purpose of manuring the land (i); but it is not settled whether putting in cattle for the mere purpose of gaining a seisin be good (i).

No certain number of beasts is necessary to give seisin, for user of a common sans nombre will have this effect (k).

As to the persons through whom seisin may be acquired, the seisin of the tenant for life or years is sufficient for him in reversion (l), but the seisin of the ancestor is not sufficient for the heir (m); so, if a copyholder enter as a commoner, his entry will be taken to be in right of the lord, though not by his command, and he have not even notice of it (n).

If a man be disseised of his land, to which common is appendant, he loses his right to the common until he recovers seisin (o).

For this reason it is, that a tenement being an uncertain thing dower will not lie for it (t).

309. There may be curtesy of all commons not excepting common sans nombre; for the husband having the whole inheritance, there is no occasion for it to be divided as in the case of dower (u).

310. Right of common being an incorporeal hereditament, is not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor; therefore, where the burgesses of Nottingham and the occupiers of ancient messuages there, had, as such, for a certain portion of the year, a right to turn cattle into certain fields, and to exclude during that period the owner of the soil, this was held to be a mere right of common and not rateable to the relief of the poor (y), that not being an exclusive occupation so as to bring it within the 43 El. See further Dig. P. III. tit. POOR (RATE).

In Jones v. Maunsell (d), it was much discussed but not settled whether the herbage and pannage of a forest in the hands of a subject be rateable under the 43 EL; but in Lord Bute v. Grindal (e), it was held that the ranger of a royal park is not rateable for the herbage and pannage when it yields no profit.

Subject to tithe.

311. Where common is appendant or appurtenant it is considered as part of the land, and, therefore, is exempt from tithe, because it is paid in regard of the land to which it appertains (f); but it is otherwise with a common in gross, for that is annexed to the person, and not to land, therefore the party entitled to such common must pay an agistment tithe in respect thereof (g).

So, it has been laid down as a rule on this point, that where there are two distinct rights claimed by different parties, which encroach on each other in the enjoyment of them, the question is which of the two rights is subservient to the other. It may be either the lord's right which is subservient to the commoners', or the commoners' which is subservient to the lord's. In general, one would say, that the lord's is the superior right, because the property of the soil is in him; but if the custom, established by evidence, shew, that it is subservient to the commoners', then he cannot use the common beyond that extent (n).

319. The most important right belonging to the lord in his wastes is that of approvement, a right given to the lord by the Statute of Merton, (20 H. 3, c. 4), and extended by other statutes (Westm. 2, c. 46; 3 & 4 E. 6, c. 3, &c.; see Dig. P. II. tit. COMMONS), by which he is authorized to inclose and convert to the uses of husbandry any waste ground, woods, or pastures appendant to the estates of his tenants, or on which they have common. At common law, it seems that the lord could not approve against his tenants (o), it being supposed that the right of common issued out of the whole waste (p); but on this point there appears to have been some diversity of opinion (q).

may, by force of the Statute of Merton, approve against the tenants and commoners (s).

The subjects of approvement are commons appendant and appurtenant, for the words of the statute seem to be confined to such portions of the waste as are attached to a tenement (t), and a common by vicinage being nearly allied to the first of these, is approvable within the statute (u), but not a common in gross (v), for the lord cannot approve against his own grant (w). So, it has been held that there can be no approver in derogation of a right of common of turbary, since the lord cannot approve against his own grant, and common of turbary necessarily arises by a grant (x); but if there are two distinct rights in the same waste, one of which may be approved against and the other not, the approver may take place if there be no injury to the other (y); therefore, where there was common of turbary and common of pasture on the same waste, it was held, that the common of turbary would not hinder the lord from inclosing against the common of pasture; so, where a right to take gravel was united with a right to take pasture (z). See further as to the construction of these acts, Dig. P. II. tit. COMMONS, and the notes there. So, a custom authorizing the owners of ancient messuages, after clearing certain moss dales, to approve and hold them in severalty has been sustained (a); so, a custom for tenants in a manor to inclose does not abridge the common law right of the lord to inclose (b); but the party who has inclosed, is not en-

321. But the lord or owner of the soil who improves, whether at common law or under the statute, must leave sufficient for the other commoners(e); and the lord must not improve the whole land, even although he leave sufficient in other lands, 2 Co. 25; but see 3 E. 3, cited Bro. Com. pl. 52, where it was held, that where a lord had common in three vills, he might approve in the one vill, leaving sufficient in the other two. The insufficiency of common left is to be presumed where the plea states that the inclosure, no matter by whom made, prevented the full enjoyment of the common (f); so, the extent of the right to approve is a question for the jury, for the right to approve depends upon the question of sufficiency having been left at the time for all the persons having right of common (g), and if at the time of the approvement sufficiency be left, it is good, and the approvement shall remain, although afterwards it turn out to be insufficient (h).

Sufficiency

Where a common has been inclosed for the space of thirty years, it shall not afterwards be thrown down (i); and if it be suggested that an inclosure is an improvement under the Statute of Merton, an injunction will be granted until the matter is determined at law (k).

from being considered as an inclosure (m); so, where commoners inclose, one who does not inclose cannot distrain cattle damage feasant (n).

Building on the waste.

By the Statute of Westminster 2, a power is also given to the lord to erect certain buildings there specially mentioned, as a windmill, sheepcote, dairy, court, and necessary curtilage; and by construction this statute has been extended to a house for the habitation of the lord, or that of his shepherd (o); and it seems that in this case the lord is not obliged to leave sufficient pasture (p).

2. Interest of the Commoner.

To depasture only.

Commoner cannot meddle with the soil.

323. The interest which a commoner has in the common is, in the legal phrase, to eat the grass with the mouths of his cattle; he must not meddle with the soil, nor with its fruit and produce, not even though it may eventually improve and meliorate the common (q); therefore, a commoner cannot make a trench or ditch to let the water off, unless there is a custom to authorize him (r); so, unless by special prescription he cannot cut rushes (s); nor fill up coney burrows (t); so, he cannot cut down trees (u).

Although the lord is by presumption of law altogether entitled to the soil, yet a custom giving the commoner a right even to mines may be established, and acts of ownership for a number of years may be admitted in evidence of such a custom (v).

lord.

So, if he make improvements, it is incumbent on him to leave sufficient pasture for the commoners, and the commoner may have an action of trespass, or on the case, if the lord commit any excess (y); so, if the lord plant trees to the prejudice of the common (z).

In case of sur-charging.

So, if the lord by any inclosure leave not sufficient common, the commoner may justify breaking down the inclosure (a), as to abate a hedge or any other erection, for he does not thereby meddle with the soil (b), for a hedge, a gate, or a wall, to keep the commoners' cattle out is inconsistent with a grant which gives them a right to come in (c); but unless the lord does any act which totally excludes the commoner from the enjoyment of his rights (in which latter case the commoner may do whatever is necessary to let himself into the common), the commoner can assert his right by no act of his own, because he cannot make himself a judge in his own cause (d).

Of inclosure.

325. On the other hand, if the commoner's right be only abridged and not totally destroyed, he must not abate the nuisance by his own act, but must resort to an action suited to the nature of the injury (e); therefore, when the greater part of the common is occupied by a pond, the commoner may let out the water; sed secus, if he can get to any part of his common (f); in this latter case he can only have an action for the injury (f).

So, as a rule, a commoner cannot distrain the cattle of the lord or terre-tenant damage feasant; but if the lord surcharges he may have his action (g), but see infra, § 325; so, if a man has common of estovers, and the lord cuts down all the wood, the commoner cannot take that which is cut, but his proper remedy is his action on the case (h); but if a man claim all the thorns, &c., growing in such a place, he may take them, though cut down by another (i).

326. The right of the commoner may by prescription be such as to exclude the lord, for he may have the sole common for a certain time, as after the grass is cut until Lammas-tide (h), and the better opinion appears to be (although it is not settled), that if the lord in that case put in more cattle than he ought, the commoner may distrain them damage feasant (l); so, where the land was by custom to be entirely fresh every second year till Lady-day, it was held, that the commoner might distrain the cattle of the lord, because during that season the lord was totally excluded, and had no colour to put any cattle there at all (m).

§ 335. An extinguishment of commons takes place in the case of unity of possession, by severance from the land to which they belong, of a release by the commoner, of approvement and inclosure, and of dissolution of the estate to which they are attached.

case, 1 Roll. Abr. 235.

1. By Unity of Possession.

336. A common may be extinguished when the whole of the land to which the common is appendant, is united with that in which the common is taken; for, in that case, a man has as high and perdurable estate in the thing claimed, as in the land out of which it is claimed (e); therefore, where an abbot had common in the lands of another abbot appendant to his own abbey, and both the abbeys at the dissolution of the monasteries came into the hands of the king, by such unity of possession the common was held to be extinct (f); but if the estate in the land to which the common is annexed is not so high and perdurable as that where the right of common exists, it is not such a unity of possession as to extinguish the common (g); and it must be not only as high, but also equally perdurable, see infra, § 337.

Common ap-
pendant.

What estates.

337. So, where the common is annexed to a customary tenement, parcel of a manor, a right of common will, it seems, in that case survive, so that the lord may not be prejudiced; therefore, as in the case of a common appendant, where, if a tenant of a manor purchased a seignory, and then granted over the tenancy, held that the common which he had before should still be appendant, for it was not extinguished by the unity, but should pass with the tenancy, though otherwise of a common in gross (h); so, where a copyhold tenement was seized into the hands of the lord, who re-granted it as copyhold, the right of common was held not to be extinct, and that, as long as the tenement to which it belonged was demisable by copy of court-roll, it would remain (i); so, if the lord of a manor alien his waste, the copyholder's right of common is not gone, although the commonable soil is divested from his person (j); so, where there was a manor in the king's forest, and the lord and the tenants had common in the wastes of the forest, and also in the lands of the freeholders, and at the dissolution the manor came into the king's hands, by this unity of possession the common was extinct as to the lord, though not as to the copyholder (k). If only part of the land is purchased by the commoner in which the common is, it is extinct only for that part, because common appendant is apportionable, see ante, § 333.

Common ap-
purtenant, when extinguished.

338. Common appurtenant cannot, like common appendant, be extinct for part, and in esse for part, by act of the parties, (see supra, § 337), (l); therefore, if a commoner purchases parcel of the land in which he has common appurtenant, this extinguishes all the common (m), common appurtenant not being apportionable like common appendant (n); so, common appurtenant to house and land is extinguished by purchase of the land (o).

Common in gross.

339. Where the whole waste, in which common in gross sans nombre is, comes by purchase to the commoner, it is lost (p); therefore, where an abbot had a common in gross sans nombre, which, on the dissolution of the abbey, became united to the crown, by such unity of possession the common was destroyed, and could not be revived in the hand of the patentee, for then every man that had any part of the abbot's possessions would have as great a common as the abbot himself had, and the king's land might be infinitely Extinguishment is properly produced by the act of the party, for by act of law there will be no extinguishment, as the law works no injury (t).

2. By Severance.

340. Commons are likewise destroyed by severing them from the tenement to which they are appendant or appurtenant, as where one aliens the tenement excepting the common right attached to it (u); so, if a man seised of land to which common is appendant, be disseised of the common, and afterwards enfeoff another of the land, the common is extinct for ever (x); so, if a house be destroyed to which common of estovers is attached the right is gone (y); but, enlarging a house, or building new chimneys, will not cause a loss of the right (z); nor will the right be destroyed by the act of God, for this prejudices no man (z); so, the act of the lord, independent of the commoner, will not operate to the prejudice of the latter, as where a manor was granted to A., with a reservation of trees, and A. granted a copyhold estate for life, it was held, that notwithstanding the reservation, the tenant might take the loppings (a).

Foxman* (c), the Court held it not to be extinguishment, but that the common was in that case apportionable, so that it should be no prejudice to the terre-tenant; and so, in Benson v. Chester (d), it is said, that "a release by one commoner of his right over one part of the common may possibly operate as a release of his right over the whole, but if that were the consequence of a release by all the commoners, there would long ago have been an end of all the rights of common throughout the kingdom (e)."

4. By Approvement or Inclosure.

Where inclosure operates an extinguishment, or otherwise.

342. Approvement by the lord, operating to exclude the commoner from the improved part, is an extinguishment of common as to that part (g); but if the commoner purchase a part which is approved, his common shall not be extinct in the residue: therefore, where one had common appendant to his tenement, and the lord improved a part of the waste, leaving sufficient common for the commoners, and afterwards enfeoffed the commoner of the improvement, held that this did not extinguish his common in the residue (h).

In common pur cause de vicinage if one inclose part, it is an extinguishment of all the common (i); and it is the same if but one acre be inclosed (k); but to effect an entire extinguishment of this common, there must be such an inclosure as will prevent the cattle from straying from one field to

If the estate be dissolved to which the common is attached, the common will go with it, as if a corporation having common in gross be determined, the right is extinct (o); so, if the inhabitants of a vill claim common as appendant to an ancient messuage, and any one builds a new house or destroys the ancient messuage, the common is gone (p); so, by enfranchisement, the common is extinguished, for common which was first gained and annexed to a copyhold by custom, will be lost when the copyhold is extinct by enfranchisement, for common is not in its own nature incident to a copyhold estate, but a collateral interest gained by usage; therefore, where a copyholder of a messuage and land for life, had common in the lord's waste, and the lord granted and confirmed the said messuage and lands with the appurtenances to him and his heirs, it was held that he should still not have common, for the estate to which the common was annexed, was destroyed by his own act, for in accepting the freehold, the common was also destroyed (q), unless there be special words of grant, as if a copyholder hath common in the waste, and the lord enfeoffs him of the copyhold "with all pastures and commons whatsoever to the said messuage or tenement belonging, used, or

344. A distinction has, however, been taken, when the wastes in which the copyholder has common, are within the manor or out of the manor; therefore, where copyholders had common in the soil of a stranger, it remained notwithstanding the enfranchisement of the land, and should be enjoyed by all the tenants of the land, as it had been before by the copyholders (u). And it is said, "that where a copyholder claims common in the waste of the manor, it properly and strictly belongs to his estate as copyholder, and if he enfranchises his copyhold his common is lost; but where he claims it out of the manor, it belongs to the land and not to the estate; and if he enfranchises the estate, yet the common continues (x)."

§ 348. Injuries to the right of common, and their several remedies, are such as affect the lord and the commoner.

1. Affecting the Lord.

Disseisin.
Disturbance.

The civil injuries affecting the lord are either disseisin or disturbance. Disturbance is any act by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or diminished (n). Disturbances are of different kinds, as when one having no right puts cattle on the lord's waste (o), or one having a right either puts cattle which are not commonable (p), or puts more cattle on the waste than the herbage will sustain, or the party has a right to place there, which is called surcharging (q), or encroaches on the waste by inclosure or otherwise (r).

349. The remedy for disseisin is ejectment, and that is the only remedy since the abolition of the assize of novel disseisin by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 36 (see Dig. P. III. tit. Remedy for disseisin formerly.

The remedies for disturbances are either by action, writ of admeasurement, or distress.

The lord might (before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 36, abolishing real actions) have brought a quo jure against a claimant putting in his cattle, but now he may bring either an action of trespass or a special action on the case, which in practice had long superseded the former writ.

Another remedy for surcharges was a writ of admeasurement whereby the number and description of cattle might be reduced within their proper bounds (t). This writ lies either where a common appurtenant or in gross is certain as to number, or where a man has common appendant or appurtenant to his land, the quantity of which has never yet been ascertained (x); this remedy, though deemed to be the most effectual, has in practice given way to the more summary and expeditious remedies by trespass or action on the case.

The lord may maintain an action for every trivial trespass, because of the entry and trespass, although it is otherwise with the commoner (y); and it is not necessary that the owner of the soil should be actually in possession to enable him to maintain an action; therefore, where a reversioner sued his tenant, lessee of the manor, for wrongfully inclosing parcels of the common, held that the action was well brought (z).

Distress.

350. In the case of strangers putting in their cattle, there is no question as to the lord's right to distrain them damage feasant (a); so, where the number of beasts which a commoner may depasture is limited, it is also settled that the lord may distrain (b); but where the commoner had a right of pasture for one ox only, and put on two, it was held, that the lord could only take the ox put on last, but if put on together then he might have his choice (c); but see on this point Hall v. Harding (d). It was held formerly that, in the case of appendancy the lord could not resort to this remedy until the common had been admeasured (e); so, it has been said that the lord could not distrain a commoner's cattle whose right was regulated by couchancy and levancy (f); and so, where a man turns on his cattle under some colour of right, the lord cannot distrain, sed secus where he has no right (g); so, the lord may drive the cattle of the commoner with those of a stranger to pound upon the common, in order to sever them, without a custom for so doing (h); and if the cattle of a stranger be on the common, he may drive them out or impound them (h); and if the common be surcharged, he may detain the cattle till satisfaction for the trespass without a prescription; for distress is incident to the drift of a common, being a thing of common right for the preservation of the common (i). As to the drift of a common, see Dig. P. I. II. tit. COMMON.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery has been exercised in respect to commons, not only in enforcing agreements respecting inclosures, and in aid of the lord's power to approve (n), but also by injunction in restraining excessive improvements (o); preventing injuries to young trees by the commoners' cattle (p); so, in cases of excessive use of turbary (q), and other like matters, but equity will not interfere where the plaintiff has clearly his remedy at law (r).

appurtenant, whether of pasture, estovers, or other, his remedies were (before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 36, abolishing assizes) by an assize of novel disseisin, or by ejectment^(s), but now by ejectment only; and the party injured will recover seisin of estovers, although the owner has stubbed up the wood, so that there can be no more^(t); and as to when assize might be brought and when ejectment, see 1 Freem. 447; 3 Keb. 738; 1 Str. 54; Adams on Ejectment, 19, 292; also further post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL.

Disturbance of commoner by the lord, &c.

353. A commoner may be disturbed in the enjoyment of his common either by the lord, or by another commoner, or by a stranger. The injuries which he suffers from the lord are either an undue approvement, or making undue erections, or surcharging the common, wrongful distress, obstructing the way to the common, and the like. As between one commoner and another, the most common injuries complained of are surcharging the waste, taking unreasonable estovers, digging pits, and the like. The commoner may be disturbed by a stranger, either by his putting on cattle when he has no right so to do, or by digging or carrying away stones, clay, &c.

Remedies.

354. The remedies which the commoner has are either by his own act, by action, or by distress.

By the party's own act.

If the lord approves without leaving sufficient common, the commoner may break down the whole inclosure^(u); but a distinction has been taken where the commoner is entirely excluded from his common by the lord, and where he is only abridged of his right, for in this latter case he cannot abate the nuisance or redress himself by his own act^(x);

So, where there is an excess of coney burrows, or other holes or pits on the common, the commoner cannot himself remove the nuisance, not even although his cattle fall into the pits, for he can neither kill the coneys or fill up the pits, his remedy in that case being only by action (z).

It has indeed been said that a commoner might fill up pits made by a stranger (a); but see contra, 1 Brownl. 228, also ante, § 323. It is, however, settled, that although the commoner may not kill the coneys put on the common by the lord, yet he may kill those that are bred in a neighbour's land, and cannot therefore maintain an action against the owner of the coneys (b), for coneys being feræ naturæ no one has any property in them (c).

355. So, if the lord sells the trees so that the commoner is deprived of his estovers, he may have his action, but he cannot by his own act redress the wrong; therefore, where one had a common of estovers in the wood of another, he could not take away any part of that which was cut, but should be put to his action (d); and this applies to what is done by others as well as by the lord; the commoner cannot himself remedy his own wrong, therefore he cannot justify dispersing the ashes cut and burnt by a stranger, who has a colour of right, for by cutting and burning them he has a property therein (e).

against the lord or another commoner is by action on the case; but he cannot have an action for every trespass, for if it be so small that he has not any loss, but sufficient common remains for him, then he shall not have any redress (f).

Not by trespass.

357. So, a commoner cannot, like the lord, have an action of trespass, for he has no ownership in the soil, 22 Ass. pl. 48, cited Bro. Com. pl. 24, Smith v. Kemp (g), although in this latter case, which was trespass for taking fish in a free fishery, the plaintiff had judgment, on the ground, that it should be intended that they were the plaintiff's own fish. In another case, where the lessee of a copyholder for life brought trespass vi et armis, for breaking his close and cutting his trees, it was held that the copyholder was as much tenant of the trees as of the land, and that if H. has all the thorns in such a place for estovers, he may maintain trespass against any one that cuts them, even his grantor, and in such case need not aver that he burnt them (h); this decision was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, but reversed by the Lords, on the ground, that the tenant could not cut them; and if the lord could not, then they must rot on the ground (h).

Indictment.

A commoner can, however, in no case proceed by indictment against the lord, but by action only (i).

Remedies of one commoner against another.

358. As to the remedies of one commoner against another, he may have a writ of admeasurement, an action on the case, or a distress against his fellow commoner, according to the circumstances.

INCORPoreal
HEREDITA-

In the case of surcharging the waste, it is no objection to one commoner bringing an action against another, that he himself has surcharged the common; for if A. infringe the right of common of B., it is necessary that B. should have A.'s right ascertained, otherwise his wrongful act would in process of time become evidence of his right (k).

If a writ of admeasurement be sued, he cannot take the cattle of a fellow commoner before the admeasurement, although he may afterwards, for "where there is a colour of right for putting in the cattle a commoner cannot distrain, because it would be judging for himself, in a question that depends upon a more competent inquiry; but where cattle are put upon the common without any colour or pretence of right, the commoner may distrain them, and therefore he may distrain the cattle of a stranger (l)."

But this rule with regard to distress as between commoners may be superseded by special agreement; therefore, where there was a mutual agreement between the plaintiff and defendant that neither should turn any sheep or other cattle loose into certain fields for twelve years, held that this was a release or extinguishment pro tempore of the plaintiff's right, and might have been pleaded as such (m).

§ 361. A right of way is a privilege which an individual, Definition. or particular persons, such as the inhabitants of a particular place, or the owners or occupiers of a particular house or parcel of land, have of going over another person's grounds.
It is one of the most important of incorporeal hereditaments, in which one man has an interest and a right, though another man be the owner of the soil where it is claimed.

A right of way is simply an easement or a privilege that Is an easement.
confers no interest in the land (z), as distinguished from a right to take something out of the soil, which is a profit à prendre (a).

way cannot, like a common, be pleaded as appendant, for it is an easement, not an interest; but in Beaudely v. Brook (c), when land was granted with a way thereto, this was held to be quasi appendant to it, and a thing of necessity; so, the present form of pleading is "as to the said close belonging 375. Old and New Way.

§ 363. There are five ways of claiming this right, that is, by prescription, by grant, by reservation, by custom, and from necessity; to these may be added the claims to private ways given by Act of Parliament.

1. By Prescription.

Where a man is seised in fee, he may prescribe that "he and all those whose estate he hath in the said messuage, have from time immemorial had a foot-way, &c.," (as the case may be), and this is called prescribing in a que estate (h); so, a man may prescribe for a way to a church, market, &c., through the close of another (i); or, the inhabitants of a vill may prescribe for a way to a parish church over a particular field (k); or, as it seems, a way over a church-yard (l); so, for inhabitants to have a crossway, for it is an easement and not an interest (m).

Prescribing in a que estate.

A lessee for life or years, or tenant at will, or an inhabitant of a parish who is tenant at will, cannot prescribe to have a common in their own names, because of the meanness of their estates, but they may prescribe to have a way to church over another man's ground, because such are only easements (n); but if a lessee prescribe for a way, he ought to make a good title to himself from his lessor (o). way should occupy the premises in respect of which he makes the claim, provided he is proved to be seised thereof (p).

What can or cannot be prescribed for.

364. A man cannot prescribe to have a way over another's ground from one part to another (q); but from one part of his own ground to another he may claim a way over the ground of another person (r). It has however been said, that if a man have a right of way to the church, and the close next to the house over which the way leads is his own, he cannot prescribe that he has a right of way from his house to the church, because he cannot prescribe for a right of way over his own land, sed quære (s); so, a claim of a prescriptive right of way from A. over the defendant's close unto D., is not supported by proof that a close called C., over which the way once led, and which adjoins to D., was formerly possessed by the owner of close A., and by him was conveyed in fee to another without reserving the right, for thereby it appears that the prescriptive right of way does not, as claimed, extend to D., but stops short at C. (t).

termini.

365. In claiming a way by prescription, the termini of the way should be set out, and the way should be shewn to pass from such a place to such a place (u), for a man may not go over the grounds of another, but to the right place (v); therefore, if a man claims a way from B. to the rectory, it is not good, for the terminus ad quem is uncertain (x); or that it goes from B. to a close adjoining to a messuage in B., without saying in what parish the close was, for though the messuage was in B., perhaps the close adjoining was not (y);

but a man who prescribes for a way through the close of B. need not say how many acres it contains (z); so, it is not necessary to describe all the closes intervening between the two termini (a).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-

2. By Grant.

366. A right of way is acquired by grant, when the owner of a piece of land grants to another the liberty to pass over his grounds to go to church or to market, and the like (b); so, if A. covenants that B. shall enjoy such a way (c). Unless a way be appendant to land, a grant of that land will not include the way without express words (d); so, it will not pass under the term tenement (d); but if it be appurtenant, it will of course pass under the word "appurtenances;" therefore, if a man seised of two acres, to which a way is appurtenant, grants one acre with all ways, &c., the way shall be granted (e); but not if the way be extinct (g), unless the parties appear to have intended to use the words "appurtenances," or "all ways appertaining," &c., in a sense larger than their ordinary legal sense (h); or unless it be a way of necessity which will pass without words of grant (i); or that there had been a long period of previous enjoyment of the way (j). So, by the words "all ways thereunto appertaining," in an underlease, a way over the soil of the original lessor will not pass, because the original owner only has the right of demising all ways appertaining to his property (k); but it might in that case have passed by the words "heretofore used (l);" so, if by such an underlease a way be granted without specifying any breadth, although specified in the original lease, the underlessee shall have a convenient way only (l); so, where there was a covenant in a demise for contributing with other occupiers of the lessor's property to the keeping up paths, &c., used in common by them, and it was proved that the plaintiff had always used the path in question, and that there was no other path to which the covenant could apply, it was held, that it might be inferred, particularly from the use of the word "common," that the defendant took the soil demised to him subject to the plaintiff's right of way (m).

Where, on the words of the grant in a lease, it is uncertain which of two ways is intended, parol evidence will be admitted to shew which the grantor intended to grant (n); but not evidence of the acts and declarations of the parties, as showing where the way was intended to be (n); as to the presumption of a grant from user, see post, § 380.

Way append-ant or in gross.

But there is a distinction between a grant of land where a way is appendant, and a grant of a way in gross, for in the first case a way would pass in a parol lease for less than three years (o), because whatever is incident to land will pass under the name of land (o); but in the second case it goes with the person, and can take effect by deed only (p).

Construction of grants.

Against the grantor.

367. A grant is always construed most strongly against the grantor; therefore, if a man grant premises with all ways, such ways as are ordinarily used shall pass; as if one seised of B. and W. use a way through W. to B., and then grant B. with all ways, the way through W. shall pass (q); and this will be deemed to extend to every part of the demised premises, although no express mention be made of them in the lease; therefore, where by a lease certain houses, with a piece of ground which was part of an adjoining yard, were demised to a tenant, and all ways with the said premises, or any part thereof used or enjoyed, the lessee was held entitled to a right of way to every part of the yard, such yard having been, at the time of granting the lease, in the occupation of one person, who had always used and enjoyed the same right (r); so, if a man seised of Blackacre and Whiteacre, uses a way through Whiteacre to Blackacre, and afterwards grants Blackacre with all ways, this way through Whiteacre shall pass to the grantee (s).

368. A mistake of the grantor in calling ways appurtenant, which, in fact, may be only convenient and accustomed ways, will not vitiate the grant, particularly where no proof was given of any other way in alieno solo, that would satisfy the words of the grant (t); and where the word "appertaining" cannot have its proper signification, it shall have such a signification as was intended by the parties (u). In other cases.

So, a grantor will not be permitted to defeat his own grant; therefore, where the lessees of a colliery had agreed to grant to the lessees of a neighbouring colliery a licence to use a right of way which the former enjoyed, and the owner of the first colliery then (improvidently perhaps) granted the same identical right of way, for a term of years, to the second lessee; subsequently, however, this owner became possessed by assignment of the first colliery, and of the way-leave, when he wanted to remove the materials from the old waggon road, but on an application to Chancery by the second lessees, he was prevented from so doing in contravention of his own deed (v); but in cases of

It abutted on the broadest part of the road; but, in the narrowest part of it, a narrow strip of the grantor's land intervened between the road and the premises granted; it was held, that the grantor, and those claiming from him were concluded from preventing the grantee from coming out into the road over this slip of land; the grantor having said, "This land abuts on the road," it was not competent to him to say, that the land on which it abutted was not the road (x); so, one who has a grant of an occupation way may declare in case against the owner of the land over which the way leads, for obstructing him, although it be proved that the public in general had used the way without denial for the last twelve years (y).

369. Under the grant of a free and convenient way for the purpose of carrying coals, (among other articles), the grantee has a right to lay a framed waggon-way, or any such way as may be necessary for the carrying of that commodity (z); so, where A. granted to B., his heirs and assigns, occupiers of certain houses abutting an a piece of land about eleven feet wide, which divided those houses from a house then belonging to A., the right of using the said piece of land as a foot or carriage way, and gave him "all other liberties, powers, and authorities, incident or appurtenant, needful or necessary to the use, occupation, or enjoyment of the said road, way, or passage," held, that under these words B. had a right to put down a flagstone in this piece of land, in front of a door opened by him out of his house into this piece of land, as the same was granted for the occupation of a dwelling-house, and the grantee ought to have

370. On the other hand, under the grant of a way from A. to B. in, through, and along a particular way, the grantee is not justified in making a transverse road across the same (c); so, if a person has a way through a close in a particular direction, and he afterwards purchases other closes adjoining, he cannot extend the way to those closes (d); so, a person having a private way over the land of another, cannot when the way is become impassable by the overflowing of the river, justify going on the adjoining land, although such land, together with the land over which the way is, both belong to the grantor of the way (e); it is otherwise where a highway is impassable; but that is upon a different principle, for in that case, if the usual track is impassable, it is for the general good that people should be entitled to pass in another line (e), see also further as to the user of a way, post, §§ 376, 377.

3. By Reservation.

371. A right of way may be claimed by express reservation, as where A. grants land to another reserving to himself a way over such land; and the construction of such reservations will be the same as in the case of grants, for what will pass by words in a grant will be excepted by like words in an exception (g); therefore, where a grantor conveyed in fee farm land in the manor of A., "excepting and reserved out of the grant all mines of coals within the fields and

4. By Custom.

What a good custom.

372. A right of way may likewise be claimed by custom, and a custom that every inhabitant of a certain vill shall have a way over certain land to church or to market is good, because it is an easement only, not a profit (i); so, a tithe-owner is entitled to make use of the road ordinarily used in the occupation of the close in which the tithe is taken (k); but, he cannot justify carrying his tithes home by any other road, although the farmer himself may have used it for the occupation of his farm (k); so, the right to use a towing-path along the banks of navigable rivers is founded upon, and must be ascertained solely by, the usage (l).

5. By Necessity.

In case of a grant.

373. Lastly, a right of way may be claimed from the necessity of the thing. It is a settled rule of law that the grant of a thing shall carry all things included, without which the thing granted cannot be had or enjoyed (m);

therefore, if a person having a close, bounded on every side by his own land, grants the close to another, the grantee shall, have a way as a necessary incident to the grant, as otherwise he can derive no benefit from the grant(n); and it is the same, though the close aliened be not totally inclosed by the grantor's land but partly by a stranger's, for the grantee may not go over the stranger's land(o); so, in the case of a reservation, for where a man having four closes lying together, sells three of them, reserving the middle close, but not mentioning expressly anything as to a way for himself, here the law will reserve a way for his benefit(p); and this rule is not affected by unity of possession(q); and the rule applies as well to a trustee as to any other grantor.

Thus, where a person, as a trustee, conveyed land to another, to which there was no access except over the ground of the trustee, it was held, that, as it could not be intended that the trustee made a void grant, it must be supposed that some beneficial interest would be conferred, and hence arose a way of necessity(r); so, in the case of a lease, if land be granted with a way thereto, the way shall be quasi appendant to it, and shall pass as a matter of necessity, although not expressed in the lease, for the land cannot be used without it(s).

374. On a similar principle a rector may enter into a close to carry away the tithes by the usual road; for the privilege is incident to the right of tithes given to him by the law(t); so, if one have, either by grant or prescription, a right to wreck thrown upon another's land, he has of necessary consequence a right to a way over the same land to take it(x); and as the queen has a right of way over another's land, her grantee shall have the same; but this kind of way cannot be pleaded generally, without shewing the manner in which the land over which the way is claimed is charged with it; for a plea that supposes, that, wherever a man has not another way, he has a right to go over his neighbour's close, is bad, because he has no such general right (y); and a way of necessity is only commensurate with the existence of such necessity; and when the necessity ceases, the right of way also ceases; therefore, where a man has a way of necessity over certain lands, such way ceases to exist, on his being able to approach and occupy the land for which such way was used, by passing over his own soil (z); and where a way is claimed of necessity, it will be a good plea, that the plaintiff has another way (a); but it is otherwise, when a way is claimed by prescription or grant.

way.

375. Where there is an ancient way, it should be first claimed; therefore, where A. the owner of a close situate within a close belonging to B., had a prescriptive right of way through B.'s close to his own, and B. stopped up the old way and made a new one, which was afterwards used, but subsequently was also stopped up by B., in an action by B. against A. for going over the new way, it was held that A. could not justify using this way as a way of necessity, but that he should either have gone the old way and thrown down the inclosure, or brought an action against B. for stopping up the old way (b); the new way was only a way of sufferance during the pleasure of both parties, and A. by stopping it up determined his pleasure; so, if the owner of a close in which there is an ancient way, ploughs it up, leaving a new way in another part, a person may justify going along the ancient way, for he is not bound to go the way which is unploughed (c); yet if a person chooses to go along the new way he may justify the trespass, because the plaintiff had stopped up the old way (d).

But if a man possessed of a close surrounded by others, grant that close, the grantee shall have a convenient way; he is not bound to use the same way as the feoffor has done (e); for here the old way is extinguished and a new one granted from the necessity of the case, and, consequently, it ought to be such an one as will afford the most convenient and reasonable mode of enjoying the premises (g); and so the way should be over the most convenient part of the grantor's land as a necessary incident (h), see further infra, § 376.

So, as a right to repair is incident to the grant of a way, the grantee may exercise his right by repairing in the way most convenient to himself, provided he does not thereby do anything to the prejudice of the grantor (c), see ante, § 169; but if a man grants a way through his close to another, he is not bound to keep it in repair, unless he be bound by express stipulation or by prescription (d); consequently, if the way be foundrous, the grantee is not justified in going over the adjoining ground, and what is said in Comyn's Digest and Blackstone's Commentaries on the authority of Sir *W. 380. Grants of a right of way were, before the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, (see Dig. P. III. tit. PRESCRIPTION), presumed from long enjoyment, and the Courts were in the practice of leaving it to a jury in such cases to presume a grant, where its commencement could not be otherwise accounted for (i). Therefore, in Keymer v. Summer (h) thirty years' user of a way was held to afford a presumption of a grant or licence; in another case a user for twenty years exercised adversely was held to afford sufficient grounds for the jury to presume a grant (l); as where an occupation way had been assigned under the award of commissioners of inclosure to one Joseph W. by mistake for one John W., a user exercised adversely under this mistake was sufficient to leave it to a jury to presume a grant, which must have been made within twenty-six years, as all former ways were at that time extinguished by the operation of an inclosure act (l); so, where a defendant pleaded, that his deed of grant had been lost, the jury were directed, that if they thought the defendant had exercised the right of way uninterruptedly for more than twenty years by virtue of a deed, and that that deed had been lost, they should find for the defendant; and that direction was held to be right (m).

Presumption of

But the presumption of a non-existing grant might be rebutted by evidence showing that the way had been used by leave or favour (n); so, in order to presume a grant against any party, it was necessary to show that the exercise of the adverse right on which such presumption was founded, was against the party capable of making the grant, and that it could not be presumed against him, unless there were some probable means of his knowing what was done against him; the landlord therefore was held not bound by the acquiescence of the tenant without his knowledge, though for twenty years (o), and whether he knew or not of the adverse enjoyment was a question for the jury (p); so, the knowledge of the owner might be presumed if the user had been for a great length of time (q), or from other circumstances, as where the leasees of a fishery had publicly landed their nets on the shore for more than twenty years, and had at various times dressed and improved the landing-place, and both the fishery and landing-place originally belonged to one person; it was left properly to the jury to presume a grant of the right of landing (r).

User under the Prescription Act.

381. The enjoyment of an easement as of right for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, within the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, means a continuous enjoyment, for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, of the easement as an easement (s); therefore, a plea of forty or twenty years is not supported by proof of a user for a period of fifty years before the commencement of the action, with the exception of four years immediately preceding it (t); but if there be ten years' enjoyment of a right of way, and then a cessation under a temporary agreement for another ten years, this may still be a sufficient enjoyment of the old right for twenty years to make it indefeasible under the statute, for the agreement to suspend the enjoyment of the right does not extinguish the same, nor is it inconsistent therewith (u).

Again, in order to establish a right of way within the statute it must be proved that the claimant has enjoyed "as Loss by non-user.

A right of way, like a right of common, is something collateral to the land, and therefore not regularly divested by non-user; but as from long user of a right of way a grant might be presumed (b), so, from a long forbearance to exercise the right, a release might be presumed (c); and as the right could only be acquired by twenty years' enjoyment, so it ought not to be lost by disuse for a less period (d).

By change of the place in case of prescriptive ways.

383. It has long been settled that circumstantial variations will not destroy a prescription; therefore, a prescription to take water was not destroyed by changing a fulling-mill to a grist-mill, provided no prejudice thereby arose by diverting and stopping the water, and rendering it different from what it was before (e); see also as to estovers, ante, § 299. So, a prescriptive right of way to a public towing-path on the banks of a navigable tide-river, is not destroyed by that part of the river adjoining the towing-path having been converted by statute into a floating harbour, although such towing-path was thereby subject to be used at all times of the tide, whereas before it was only used at those times when the tide was sufficiently high for the purposes of navigation (g); and such prescription is not destroyed by a clause in the statute, whereby the undertakers of the work were authorized to make a towing-path over the land, comprising the towing-path in question, on paying a compensation to the owner of the soil (g).

385. If the grantor wish to revive or create anew such a right, he must do it by express words, or introduce the terms "therewith used and enjoyed," in which case easements existing in point of fact, though not in point of law, would vest in the grantee (r); but it has been held that a grant of Whiteacre and Blackacre, "with all ways used, occupied, or enjoyed therewith," extends to ways used &c., over other lands of the grantor, but does not convey to the grantee a right to ways used to and from one of the parcels over the other of them; therefore, where A. and B. coparceners convey to C. Whiteacre and Blackacre, together with all ways therewith usually held, used, occupied, and enjoyed as to Whiteacre and the appurtenances, to the use of A. and his heirs, and as to Blackacre and its appurtenances to the use of B. and his heirs, held, that the way used before the partition from Whiteacre over Blackacre does not vest in A. under this deed (r). But commissioners of partition may award a right of way over the lands of one party to the lands of another party interested in the partition (s).

sity not extinguishable.

Under the Prescription Act a claim of a way may be defeated by unity of possession within the twenty years, in the same manner as under the old law (b).

387. A person may have a right of way in a road after it is become a highway, and the private right will not become merged in the public right; therefore, where one had a grant of an occupation way, held, that he might have an action against the owner of the land over which the way lead, for obstructing it, although it were proved that the public had used the way without denial for the last twelve years, the Court being of opinion that the plaintiff might rest his title under the deed, and need not resort to the general right (c).

Right not destroyed by alteration of the estate.

388. So, a way shall not be destroyed by a change of tenure; therefore, where a copyholder had a way, time out of mind, over the land of another copyholder, and purchased the inheritance of his copyhold, which operated as an enfranchisement of his estate, yet, nevertheless, the easement was not extinguished (d). But a way of necessity will become extinguished, like any other way, when the necessity ceases (e).

3. Extinguishment of Ways under Acts of Parliament.

Inclosure acts.

389. Under the General Inclosure Act, 41 G. 3, c. 109, s. 11 (f), it is declared that all ways which shall not be set out by the commissioners shall be extinguished, and where a private Inclosure Act does not vary the terms of the General Act, and commissioners in their award do not notice a road running over inclosed lands, such way is extinguished by the operation of the General Act; therefore, where a plaintiff having an allotment made to him by a commissioner under an Inclosure Act, of land over which the defendant had a private right of way before the passing of the Act, but which way was not noticed among those set out by the commissioner, the plaintiff may justify stopping up such way without any directions from the commissioner for that purpose (g), for the statute does not affirm another way to be set out in lieu of every old one (h); but where commissioners had no power under the General or Particular Act to stop up a way over old inclosures, and did not by their award set out any new way over the waste land inclosed, held, that an old footway passing from one highway, over wastes to old inclosures, into another, existed as it formerly did (i).

But where by an Inclosure Act a way could not be extinguished without the concurrence of two justices, held, that a way was not extinguished for want of such express concurrence (k); and this was deemed to extend to all roads public or private (l). So, where under an Inclosure Act an appeal was given in all cases, except where the determination of the commissioner was declared conclusive by the General or Particular Inclosure Act, and a commissioner set out a private road, which, upon complaint, was disallowed by the commissioner and one justice, held, that appeal was not taken away, because the order was by the commissioner, which is not said in the act to be final (m).

390. At common law there can be no destruction of a public way, a highway must always continue a highway (n); and if done by Act of Parliament, the provisions of the Act must be strictly complied with (o); and by the same authority, ways to a church, &c. may be stopped up; where therefore a discretion was left to the trustees of a turnpike road to leave open roads of that description, and they thought fit to stop up an old way, it was held that if such discretion were exercised by a judge or jury, instead of by the commissioners, it would lead to much litigation and uncertainty (p).

V. Suspension and Revival of the Right.

§ 392. When Revival takes Place.

When suspension takes place.

§ 391. Ways may not only be totally extinguished, but they may also be suspended according to the duration and nature of the estate in the land and the way (q).

Unity of possession.

Unity of possession merely suspends a prescriptive easement, there must be unity of ownership to destroy it (r); therefore, where a party became seised in fee of one set of premises, and took a lease of another set of premises, the owner of which had previously enjoyed an easement in the former, such unity of possession of the land a quâ and in quâ the easement existed, was held to operate only to suspend, not extinguish the right (s); but during such suspension the way cannot pass under the name of "appurtenance (t)."

When revival
takes place.

392. Revival of a right of way does not merely take place after a temporary suspension, but it may also take place in cases of extinguishment by the operation of a new grant. In one case indeed this matter was doubted, for where A. by prescription was to keep a fence between his close and B.'s, and he afterwards purchased B.'s close, laid all into one, and died, and his two daughters made a partition of the two closes, it was demurred in law whether the prescription revived or not (u); but in another case, where a partition took place between two coheirs, and the land, on which there was a way, went to one, and a mill to the other, it was agreed that one should have a passage over the land of the other according to the ancient right; and that this convention between the two sisters, would operate on the part of her who possessed the way as a new grant (x); so, where two closes, one where a right of way existed, and the other to which it was appendant, became the property of an individual who devised the latter with the "appurtenances," held, that this word must be confined to an old-existing right, and had any right passed by this devise, it must have passed as a new easement (y); so, where a public footway over crown land was extinguished by an inclosure, but the public continued afterwards to use the way for twenty years, such user was deemed not to be evidence of a dedication of the way, unless it appeared to have had the consent of the crown (z); but where a way has been used for thirty years after its extinguishment, it has been held sufficient to presume a new grant (a).

§ 393. Disturbance of a right of way happens for the most part when a person who has a right of way over another's ground, is obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by ploughing across it, by which means he cannot enjoy his right of way, or at least not in so commodious a manner as he is entitled to do (b).

Interruption of a right of way.

394. Interruption under the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, means an obstruction by the owner of the locus in quo, but nothing will amount to an interruption unless acquiesced in for a year (c); where, therefore, an easement had been enjoyed for nineteen years and a fraction, the right may still be acquired under this act, if an action be brought for an interruption at the end of the twenty years, for the interruption was not acquiesced in for a whole year, so as, under this act, to defeat the twenty years' user (c); and where a right of way has been once established by clear evidence of enjoyment, it can be defeated only by distinct evidence of interruptions acquiesced in; an unsuccessful attempt from time to time, on the part of the occupier of the land over which the way ran, to interrupt such right will not be sufficient to get rid of it (d).

2. Remedies.

By abatement of nuisance.

395. As a rule, a party may not abate a nuisance, for as in the case of a commoner, he has no interest in the soil and must not meddle therewith; therefore, where by means of the cartwheels belonging to the owner of the land, the way was so full of ruts that it could not be so well used as before, it was held, nevertheless, that the defendant could not justify digging a trench (e); yet if the way had been utterly denied to him, as if, for instance, he had been shut out, the case would have been different, and he would have pleaded that he could not use the way at all (f); on the same principle, if the way be foundrous, a man cannot justify going out of the way (g); it has however been said, in regard to a commoner, that if the injury be done by a stranger, and not by the owner of the soil, the nuisance may be abated by the party having a right of way (h).

396. The most usual remedy for the disturbance of a way is an action on the case (i), whether it be a way by reservation, grant, or prescription (k); and although the erection of an obstruction causes no immediate injury to the plaintiff in his use of a right of way, in consequence of his own laches, yet if its existence puts his title in hazard, and prevents him from exercising his right whenever he thinks fit to use it, he may have his action (l). But if the way be a common way, and any man be disturbed in going that way, he shall not have an action upon his case; and this the law has provided, for the avoiding a multiplicity of suits, for if any one man might have it, numbers might have the like (m). Nuisances on the highways, being public injuries, are punishable by presentment and indictment; though if special damage be laid, the case is different (n), see further post, INJURIES AND THEIR REMEDIES, also as to pleadings.

RIGHT TO WATER AND WATER-COURSES.

§ 398. A right to the use of water is either public or private. The rights connected with public waters have already been treated of (see ante, § 104 et seq., and as far as it is connected with fisheries see ante, § 108). The private right to running water, so far as this is capable of being reduced to possession, is an incorporeal hereditament, which may be considered—

who first appropriates any part of this water through his land to his own use, has the right to the use of so much as he then appropriates against any other (s); so, in Williams v. Morland (t) it had been previously said, "Flowing water is originally publici juris." So soon as it is appropriated by an individual, his right is co-extensive with the beneficial use to which he appropriates it; subject to that right all the rest of the water remains publici juris. The party who obtains an exclusive enjoyment of the water does so in derogation of the primitive right of the public (x); and so Mr. Justice Blackstone says, "Water is a movable wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature, so that I can only have a temporary, transient, usufructuary property therein; so that, if a body of water runs out of my pond into another man's, I have no right to reclaim it (y);" but by this it is not to be understood that the first occupier, or first person who chooses to appropriate a natural stream to a useful purpose, has a title against the owner of land below, and may deprive him of the benefit of the natural flow of water; and consequently it has been held, that the first occupant, though he may be the proprietor of the land above, has no right by diverting the stream to deprive the owner of the land below of the special benefit and advantage of the natural flow of water therein (z); and it is said "The object of the judgment in Mason v. Hill (a) was to set right the mistaken notion which had got abroad in consequence of certain dicta in Williams v. Morland (b), that flowing water is publici juris, and that the first occupant of it for a beneficial purpose may appropriate it (c)."

water for a beneficial purpose has a good title to it, is perfectly true in this sense, that neither the owner of the land below can pen back the water, nor the owner of the land above divert it to his prejudice. In this as in other cases of injuries to real property, possession is a good title against a wrong-doer; and the owner of the land who applies the stream that runs through it, to the use of a mill newly erected, or other purposes, if the stream is diverted or obstructed, may recover for the consequential injury to the mill (d)."

"But it is a very different question whether he can take away from the owner of the land below one of its natural advantages, which is capable of being applied to profitable purposes, and generally increases the fertility of the soil, even when unapplied, and deprive him of it altogether, by anticipating him in its application to a useful purpose. If this be so, a considerable part of the value of an estate, which, in manufacturing districts particularly, is much enhanced by the existence of an unappropriated stream of water with a fall within its limits, might at any time be taken away; and, by parity of reasoning, a valuable mineral or brine spring might be abstracted from the proprietor in whose land it arises, and converted to the profit of another (d)."

Cases in support of the principle.
Bealey v. Shaw.

401. In accordance with the principles as above laid down, it had been held in Bealey v. Shaw (e) that the owner of land through which a river runs cannot, by enlarging a channel of certain dimensions through which the water had been used to flow before any appropriation of it by another, divert more of it, to the prejudice of any other landowner lower down the river, who had before such enlargement appropriated to himself the surplus water which did not escape by the former channel; for "the general rule of law as applied to this subject is, that, independent of any particular enjoyment used to be had by another, every man has the right to have the advantage of a flow of water in his own land without diminution or alteration. But an adverse right may exist founded on the occupation of another. And though the stream be either diminished in quantity, or even corrupted in quality, as by means of the exercise of certain trades, yet if the occupation of the party so taking or using it have existed for so long a time as may raise a presumption of a grant, the other party whose land is below must take the stream, subject to such adverse right (f)."

402. In Saunders v. Newman (g), it was held that the occupier of a mill may maintain an action for forcing back water and injuring his mill, although he had not enjoyed it precisely in the same state for twenty years; and, therefore, it was no defence to such an action, that the occupier had within a few years erected in his mill a wheel of different dimensions, but requiring less water than the old one. "When a mill has been erected upon a stream for a long period of time, it gives to the owner a right that the water shall continue to flow to and from the mill, in the manner in which it has been accustomed to flow during all that time (h)."

"If a person stops the current of a stream which has immemorially flowed in a given direction, and thereby prejudices another, he subjects himself to an action (i);" as to the period of enjoyment necessary to give this right, see infra, § 415; and as to the manner of enjoyment necessary for maintaining the right, see infra, § 418 et seq.

proprietor of half the land covered by the stream, but there is no property in the water. Every proprietor has an equal right to use the water which flows in the stream, and consequently no proprietor can have a right to use the water to the prejudice of any other proprietor. Without the consent of the other proprietors who may be affected by his operations, no proprietor can either diminish the quantity of water, which would otherwise descend to the proprietors below, or throw the water back upon the proprietors above. Every proprietor who claims to throw the water back above, or diminish the quantity of water which is to descend below, must, in order to maintain his claim, either prove an actual grant or licence from the proprietors affected by his operations, or must prove an uninterrupted enjoyment of twenty years (l).

Result of the cases.

404. The opinions expressed in Williams v. Morland (m), and Liggins v. Inge (n), respecting the common right to water, were supposed at one time to be at variance with the doctrine laid down in the preceding cases; but it is said that "the object of the judgment in Mason v. Hill (o), was to set right the mistaken notions which had got abroad in consequence of certain dicta in Williams v. Morland (p), that flowing water is publici juris, and that the first occupant of it for a beneficial purpose may appropriate it" (q), it being by that case established that the position in the two former cases is correct, with this qualification only, that by such appropriation no greater right is claimed than to a flow of water in its usual and accustomed course, and it is settled that no appropriation except for such a period as will confer an easement, can diminish the natural rights of other parties.

406. A right to discharge water on another's land has been recognised in several cases. Thus, a right may be acquired to throw back upon the land of proprietors higher up the stream the water which, unless so forced back, would naturally pass from it (s); so, a right to let off upon the neighbouring land, water which had been used for the precipitation of minerals, and was thereby rendered noxious (t); so, although every man is bound to construct his house so that it should not overhang his neighbour's property, and to construct his roof so as not to throw the rain-water upon the neighbouring land (u); yet, a right may be acquired by user, to project the wall or eaves over the boundary line of his property, and so to discharge the rain on his neighbour's land (x); so, likewise, to discharge water in the neighbouring land by means of a gutter or pipe (y); but, a party receiving water drained from a mine, cannot compel the owners of the mine to continue such discharge; therefore, where certain parties constructed a sough or level, for the purpose of draining their mineral field, and the water from this sough flowed into a brook, the united waters of which turned an ancient corn-mill, after which, A. obtained a lease of the brook, of the stream of water issuing from the sough into it, and of the piece of land on which the corn-mill stood, with the right of erecting mills thereon, which lease contained a proviso, that if, during the term, the stream issuing from the sough, should, by the bringing up of any other sough, or by unavoidable accident, be taken away or lessened, so that there should not come to the mills sufficient to work them, and the lessor should not be able to supply it, it should be lawful for A. to take down the mills and remove them to another piece of ground therein described, of which a lease should be granted for the rest of the term. The sough having afterwards been drained by means of another sough, so that water supplying A.'s mills was thereby diverted, it was held, that, under the circumstances, A. had not acquired by user of the water issuing from the sough, such a right to it as to entitle him to maintain an action against the owners of the second sough, this being an artificial water-course, made for a temporary and particular purpose, and its water having been taken by him, with notice that it might be discontinued, and there being nothing on which to found the presumption of a grant by the owner of the mines, he did not acquire such right by force of the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71 (z). A user for twenty years, or more, would afford no presumption of a grant of the right to the water in perpetuity, for such a grant would be neither more nor less than an obligation on the mine owner not to work his mines by the ordinary mode of getting minerals, below the bed drained by that sough, and to keep the mines flooded for the benefit of others (z).

Artificial watercourses.

407. In the absence of any special custom, artificial water courses are regulated by the same rules as natural ones, and a title may be gained by user in the one case as in the other; therefore, where mine owners made an adit through their lands, to drain which they afterwards discontinued to work, and the owner of a brewery, through whose premises the water flowed for twenty years after the working had ceased, had, during that time, used it for brewing, it was held, that he thereby gained the undisturbed enjoyment of the water, and that mines could not afterwards be worked to pollute it (a). It seems to be questionable whether a universal practice in the neighbourhood, to resume the use of such adit waters for mining purposes, after a long interval, might not have been set up in answer to the claim of easement, thereby raising the inference, that the party claiming used the water not of right, but only during the accidental disuse of the adit, and with knowledge that the mine owners reserved to themselves a power to recommence working, and thereby disturbing the water (a); so, the proposition that a watercourse, of whatever antiquity, and in whatever degree enjoyed by numerous persons, cannot be so enjoyed as to confer a right to the use of the water, if proved to have been originally artificial, was held to be quite indefensible (a).

(z) Arkwright v. Gell, 5 M. & W. 220.

408. By the term water-course is usually understood a stream of water flowing above ground, but similar questions may arise respecting the right to a flow of water underground. In Cooper v. Barber (b), where a party had for several years pushed back a stream for the purpose of irrigation, in consequence of which the water penetrated through the neighbouring soil, it was held, that no right to cause such percolation was acquired by the user, and the adjoining owner, on sustaining any injury from it to his newly erected house, might bring an action; but in Balston v. Bensted (c), it was held that after twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment of a spring, an absolute right to it is gained by the occupier of the close in which it issues above ground, and the owner of the adjoining close is not justified in cutting a drain, whereby the supply of water to the spring is diminished.

Private rights

409. In the case of a navigable river, the presumption is that the soil is vested in the crown, yet a subject may claim a prescriptive right to a several fishery in an arm of the sea, even against the crown (d); and may, by grant or prescription, have the interest in the water and soil of navigable rivers, as the city of London has the soil and property of the Thames by grant (e); so, special rights in the water have been acquired by way of easement to properties (f); but a man cannot prescribe to have a necessary easement in the land of another, for himself and his servants to catch fish in his several fishery (g), for it is there said that though the word easement is known in law, yet in this case the thing itself is set forth, that is, to catch fish, &c., and certainly no instance can be given for such a liberty by such a word or name (g), see further as to fishery, ante, § 104 et seq.; also common of piscary, ante, § 304.

410. A right in the occupier of an ancient messuage to water his cattle at a pond, and to take the water thereof for domestic purposes, is a mere easement, and not a profit à prendre in the soil of another. Such a right may be claimed by reason of the occupation of an ancient messuage, without any limitation as to the quantity of water to be taken (h); so, there may be a right to land and mend nets on another man's ground (i); and the acquiescence of the owner may be presumed from circumstances (j).

1. By Prescription or Custom.

§ 411. A right to water may be claimed by prescription or custom, by grant, and by appropriation. How it may be prescribed for.

An easement in respect of water may be claimed, if not by direct prescription, at least by custom. It is said, "A water-course doth not begin by prescription, nor yet by assent, but the same doth begin ex jure naturæ, having taken this course naturally, and cannot be averted (k);" yet it may be claimed by prescription, but if a man prescribe generally for a water-course, and it turns out in evidence that the water has not always run to the plaintiff's house, it has been held that he had failed of his prescription (k); so, it may be alleged as a custom to have a water-course or a washing-place in another man's ground (l); and although a multitude cannot prescribe, yet for an easement they may plead custom (m); but the stanners of Devonshire are not entitled by custom to divert water from streams running into their mines, and for that purpose to dig trenches over other people's lands (n). Must be by deed.

2. By Grant.

412. A grant either express or implied is for the most part the foundation of the right to water, but it requires a deed to create a right and title to have a passage for water; therefore, where one declared in case for obstructing a water-course upon his possession of a mill with the appurtenances, and that by reason of such his possession he had a right to the use of water running in a certain tunnel, such allegation is not supported by proof that the tunnel was made on the defendant's land, which he had agreed by parol to let the plaintiff have for a certain consideration, because the plaintiff had not the water by reason of his possession of the mill, but by parol licence, or contract (o).

A right of way, or a right of passage for water, (where it does not create an interest in land), is an incorporeal right, and stands upon the same footing with other incorporeal rights, such as rights of common, rents, advowsons, &c., it lies not in livery but in grant, and a freehold interest cannot be created or passed otherwise than by deed (p); so, where a subject is owner of a several fishery in a navigable river, where the tide flows and reflows, granted to him (as must be presumed), before Magna Charta by the description of separalem piscariam, it being an incorporeal hereditament, a term for years cannot be created in it without deed (q).

or presumed.

413. A grant may be implied from long user; therefore, where a bill was brought to quiet the plaintiff in the enjoyment of a water-course to his house and garden through the ground of the defendant, and it appeared that the water-course had been enjoyed for a great length of time, it was held, that it should be presumed that the owner of the house had a right to the water-course, unless the other party could shew a special licence, or an agreement to restrain it in point of time (r); so, where a plaintiff had been in possession of a water-course for upwards of sixty years, and the defendant claimed the land through which the water-course ran by virtue of a forfeited mortgage, the plaintiff's title being proved, and also the fact that the defendant had cut a channel through his own lands, and set up a sluice, whereby the water-course had been diverted, the Court in this case decreed for the plaintiff without sending him to try his right at law (s).

414. So, the knowledge of the owner of the land and his acquiescence may be presumed from circumstances; thus, when the lessees of a fishery had publicly landed their nets on the shore at A. for more than twenty years, and had at various times dressed and improved the landing-place, and both the fishery and the landing-place at one time belonged to the same person, but no evidence was offered to shew that he, or those who under him owned the shore at A., knew of the landing of the nets by the lessee, it was held, that it was properly left to the jury to presume a grant of the right of such landing to the lessees by some former owner of the shore at A. (t).

quiescence.

But before the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, the acquiescence of lessees would not bind the landlord, nor that of tenants for life, the reversioner; therefore, where A. a tenant for life with power of jointuring, after executing his power, gave a licence to B. to erect a weir on his (A.'s) soil for the purpose of watering B.'s meadow, then A. died, and the jointress entered, after which the tenant of A.'s farm diverted the water from the weir, it was held in an action by the tenant of B.'s farm against the tenant of A.'s farm, that the uninterrupted possession of the water for so many years, with the acquiescence of the tenants for life, would not affect the reversioner (x).

415. Before the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, "Twenty years exclusive enjoyment of water in any particular manner, afforded a strong presumption of right in the party so enjoying it, derived from grant or Act of Parliament (y);" but it seems that less than twenty years' enjoyment may or may not afford such a presumption according as it is attended with circumstances to support or rebut the right (y), as where land is sold with a run of water upon it, the use of the water for less than twenty years will give a man title to it, because the water passes with the land (z); so, if water has been accustomed to flow along a channel from time immemorial, and it has been appropriated, the first owner of the adjoining land on both sides who appropriates it, without doing injury to any one, either above or below him, acquires such a right by the appropriation that, though he may not have enjoyed it for twenty years, he may maintain an action against any owner of the lands above who wrongfully diverts the water from its ancient channel (a); but in Prescott v. Phillip (b), it was held that "Nothing short of twenty years' undisturbed possession of water diverted from the natural channel or raised by a weir, could give a party an adverse right against those whose lands lay lower down the stream, and to whom it was injurious, and that a possession of nineteen years, which was shewn in that case, was not sufficient; so, although an adverse enjoyment for the space of twenty years, &c. as against a private individual, is evidence of a grant by him, yet it is otherwise in the case of a public river navigable by all the queen's subjects, for no

But it is laid down by Lord Coke, that if a man grant aquam suam, the soil shall not pass, but the piscary within the water shall(e); so, the undertakers of a navigation, in whom the soil is not vested, have a mere easement in the land through which it passes(f); but if land be purchased, through which a stream of water runs, the water passes with the land, and although the conveyance be silent as to the water, still the water will pass with the land(g).

under a grant.

The grantor of an easement of this kind must have such an estate as will enable him to grant the privilege; therefore, where a person has neither the legal or equitable estate in the property in respect of which he proposes to grant an easement, the deed will be void, as where one gave licence to another to continue a channel or open way through the bank of a river, and the deed imported that the grantor and another could grant the possession of the whole of the river, in such a manner, as that the grantee could insist upon its being kept open during the term, but it afterwards appeared that other parties had an interest in the river, and that the grantors could not dispose of all the water, only of so much as belonged to them, it was held, that although the words of a grant be general, yet where it appears by the deed, that the grantor has a limited interest, the grant will be construed as co-extensive with and limited by the right of the grantor; and in this instance it appears that the parties had not the power of creating any interest in a real hereditament, because they themselves were not solely seised of such an hereditament, being interested jointly with others, and the hereditament could only be granted for a term by all the shareholders, who at least must be tenants in common; the plaintiff had neither a legal nor an equitable estate, he was only entitled to a share of the profits of the navigation; the legal estate might have been in other persons; the equitable estate must have been in the whole body of proprietors (h).

8. By Appropriation or Occupancy.

Effect of appropriation.

417. From what has already been stated, it appears clear that there can be no title to water by mere occupancy, (see ante, § 400), but that continued beneficial enjoyment of a running stream is evidence of the right to have the stream run on in its accustomed course; and no one can interfere with such accustomed course, unless justified by some grant or licence so to do, (see ante, § 399 et seq). If a mill or other occupation of water be ancient, it is settled that the owner may maintain an action for any obstruction; therefore, in Cox v. Matthews (i), it is said, "If a man has a water-course running through his ground, and erects a mill upon it, he may bring an action for diverting the stream, and need not say antiquum molendenum (h);" and it appears also clear from what follows in this same case, that any appropriation of the water to a beneficial purpose, gives a right to have the stream run on in its accustomed course, so far at least as may be necessary to serve the purpose, for it then added, "upon the evidence it will appear whether the defendant had ground through which the stream ran, before the plaintiffs, and that he used to turn the stream as he saw cause, for otherwise he cannot justify it, though the mill be newly erected (l);" and it has since been laid down as a rule, "that after the erection of works, and the appropria-

The enhancing, straitening, or enlarging of an ancient weir, as well as the new erection of one, for the purpose of stopping fish in their passage up the river, is treated as a public nuisance by Magna Charta, c. 23, and 12 E. 4, c. 7; and the right to convert a brushwood into a stone weir is not evidenced by shewing that, forty years ago, two-thirds of it had been so converted, without interruption, and the action for the injury having been brought within twenty years after the remaining third was so converted (u).

420. A proprietor of land adjoining a river, has a right to raise the banks, from time to time, as occasion may require, upon his own land, so as to confine the flood-water within the banks, and to prevent it from overflowing his land, with this single restriction, that he does not thereby occasion any injury to the lands or property of other persons; therefore, where an indictment against the proprietors of land adjoining a river, charged the defendants with erecting mounds and embankments, whereby the waters of the river were wrongfully forced against an aqueduct belonging to the prosecutors, the proprietors of a canal, to the injury thereof, and judgment had been given for the crown, the court awarded a venire de novo, on the ground that the special verdict did not state with sufficient certainty, what was the real cause of the penning back of the water in time of flood, as, in order to shew the defendants guilty, it ought to appear distinctly, that the raising the fenders or embankments was not an accustomed and rightful usage, sanctioned by the ordinary right which every man prima facie has to protect his own property, provided he can do so without injury to others; nor, whether the course which the flood-water was stated to have taken, was the ancient and rightful course which it ought to take; and further, that it ought not to have been left in doubt whether the embankment and Savill* (b), where it was charged against the defendants, that by a wrongful construction of their flood-gates and machinery, they had so penned up the course of a river, as to occasion an overflow of water upon the plaintiff's farm, but it having been shewn in evidence, that the water of the mill had always flowed over the adjoining meadows, this was deemed to be evidence of a grant; so, where a ditch anciently opened into a stream, but the owner of a mill on the stream kept the opening closed for twenty years or more, without interruption, it was held, that such user would give the mill owner a right to keep it shut, and the owner of the adjoining land would not be justified in re-opening the communication (c).

422. Again, it has been held not necessary that the mode of enjoying a water-course should have always been precisely the same; therefore, where the plaintiff, owner of a mill, claimed a prescriptive right to water which had been accustomed to flow to his mill, and the defendant was charged with keeping a hatch-dam or mill-head at a much greater height than he had been accustomed, so that the water was obstructed from flowing in its usual channel and forced back against the plaintiff's mill, to his great injury, it appeared in evidence that the old mill had been burnt down, and the plaintiff had built the mill in question with a wheel of the same dimensions, and on the same level with the former one, since which time he had erected a new wheel of different dimensions, which required less water, but there was no proof that the owner of the lower mill had received any injury in consequence of altering the wheel; it was held, therefore, that the plaintiff might maintain an action for the injury to his mill, although he had not enjoyed it in that state for twenty years, and it was no defence to such an action that the plaintiff had, within a few years, erected in his mill a wheel of different dimensions, inasmuch as the defendant was not prejudiced thereby (d); but if the owner of a water-mill, worked by a ground-shot wheel at a low head of water, alter the wheel to a breast-shot wheel, which requires a high head of water, and after that for twenty years and more discontinue the use of the breast-shot wheel, his discontinuance will cause him to lose the right to the high head of water (e).

§ 424. The pulling down a house for the purpose of repair does not by the law of England, when construed most strictly, cause the loss of any easement attached to it, provided there is evidence of an intention to rebuild it within a reasonable time (m); so, a change in the mode of enjoying an easement does not destroy it (n). But it is said that "what is gained by occupancy may be lost by abandonment (o);" therefore, a licence given by the plaintiff, owner of a mill, to the defendant, to cut down and lower the bank, and to erect a weir in a river, whereby part of the water was diverted from his mill, was held to be a relinquishment of that quantity of water; and after having clearly signified such relinquishment, and suffered others to act upon the faith of such relinquishment, and to incur expense in doing the very act to which his consent was given, an action was not maintainable against the defendant for continuing the weir (p); and it was further said, "Suppose a person, who formerly had a mill upon a stream, should pull it down, and remove the works with the intention never to return, could it be held that the owner of other land adjoining might not erect a mill and employ the water so relinquished? or that he could be compellable to pull down his mill, if the former mill-owner should change his determination and wish to rebuild his own (p)?"

425. Though a rent and a way may be extinguished, yet it is otherwise with a water-course, for that is a thing of necessity; therefore, in Shury v. Piggott (p), an action was brought for obstructing a stream of water running over the defendant's land to the pool of the plaintiffs, situate in a close which was part of the plaintiff's rectory. The defendant pleaded that the land over which the water ran, and the plaintiff's close, were both part and parcel of the manor of Markham, and that King Hen. 8, being seised of the said manor in his demesne as of fee, granted the land over which the water ran to one under whom the defendant claimed, and the question was, whether the unity of the ownership in the king had extinguished the easement; and it was resolved by the whole Court, that the water-course was not extinguished (q); and it was likened to the case of a warren, or a right to drive beasts to pasture in a forest, which rights are not extinguished by unity; and so it is of a gutter, which like a water-course has a separate existence (q). But "if a man hath a stream of water which runneth in a leaden pipe, and he buys the land where the pipe is, and cuts the pipe and destroys it, the water-course is extinct, because he thereby declares his intention and purpose that he does not wish to enjoy them together (r);" if, however, "A man having a mill and a water-course over his land, sells a portion of the land over which the water-course runs, in such a case by necessity the water-course remaineth to the vendor, and the vendee cannot stop it (s)."

428. But every interference with a water-course claimed by another will not render the author of it liable, for when a person has been accustomed to turn a stream according to his pleasure, he may justify so doing, although it operate to the prejudice of another; this may be inferred from the words of the Court in Cox v. Matthews (g), where it is said in reference to the pleadings, "It would appear in evidence whether the defendant had ground through which the stream ran before the plaintiff's, and whether the defendant used to turn the stream as he saw fit, for that otherwise he could not justify it (h);" but this applies only to private rights, therefore, although adverse enjoyment for the space of twenty years is as against a private individual evidence of a grant, yet it is otherwise in the case of a public navigable river, for no obstruction for twenty years will bar a public right (i).

§ 429. Under this head may be considered first, what remedies may be had for disturbances of the right to water; next, what gives a right of action; and lastly, by whom, and against whom, the remedy may be had.

What remedies for disturbance of the right.

The remedies to be had in such cases are, either by act of the party, by action, arbitration, or by application to a court of equity.

By act of the party.

430. A party entitled to a water-course may redress himself by abating the nuisance, as if a man make a ditch in his land, by which the water accustomed to run to the mill of another becomes diminished, the aggrieved party may fill in the ditch; and it is said that his entry into the land of the offending party is allowable for that purpose (j); so, where the plaintiff had erected a dam for supporting a fish-pond on his own soil, but the dam stopped a rivulet which the defendant enjoyed for the benefit of his cattle, whereupon he entered and abated the nuisance, and the Court refused to set aside a verdict in his favour (k); so, if water runs through the land of a man, and he so stop it in its course as that it surrounds the land of the other, it is competent to this latter to remove the obstacle which hinders the escape of the water (l) ; so, every inhabitant of a vill near which a stream runs may destroy every impediment to its course, otherwise the place might be inundated (m) ; and if a lawful water-course be impeded, for want of repair or otherwise, the injured party may quietly abate the nuisance ; therefore, where the tenant of a house had a conduit for the purpose of conveying water thereto, which passed through the land of another, it was held, that he might dig the land of the latter for the repair of the pipe (n) ; and it made no difference that the plaintiff in this case was a grantee of the land, for the land passed cum onere ; and so, a party might be justified in removing a hatch that impeded the course of the water to his mill, unless it appeared to have been made in exercise of a right (o).

431. In abating a private nuisance, a party is bound to take reasonable care that no more damage be done than is necessary for effecting the purpose (p) ; but the same care is not necessary in abating a public nuisance (q) ; yet, in the case of a private nuisance, the party aggrieved will not be answerable for any damage resulting from the act, if he abate no more than is necessary ; therefore, where one erected a mill-dam partly on his own land and partly on the land adjoining, upon which the owner of the adjoining land pulled down the part on his own land, and the whole dam fell down, he was held to be justified (r) ; but he may not abate more than is absolutely necessary ; therefore, where the plaintiff had a right to irrigate his meadow by placing a dam of loose stones across the stream, and occasionally a board and a fender, and he fastened the board with two stakes, which he had no right to do, the defendant was held justified in removing the stakes, although not so in removing the board, Greenslade v. Halliday (s); and it was there said, "If a party who has a right to erect a weir, erects buttresses thereto, although there might be an encroachment on the land of another, which would justify him in pulling them down, yet he would have no right to pull down or demolish the weir also (t)." So, the thing complained of cannot be abated until it actually becomes a nuisance; so, that if one see his neighbour erecting that which in all probability will ultimately be such, it cannot be abated as long as it continues inoffensive (u); but notice ought to be give to the offending party not to proceed, otherwise it is doubtful whether the nuisance can afterwards be abated (v).

By action on the case.

432. The ordinary remedy now is an action on the case; thus, where the owners of property have, by long enjoyment, acquired special rights to the use of water in its natural state as it was accustomed to flow, by way of particular easement to their own properties, and not merely a use which is common to all the queen's subjects, an action on the case may be maintained for a disturbance of the enjoyment (x); but where the injury, if any, is to all the queen's subjects, the only remedy is by indictment (y).

Case or trespass.

433. As to whether the action should be case or trespass, has been a matter of doubt in some cases. The general rule is, that where the damage does not immediately result from the act complained of, it is consequential, and case is the proper form; on the other hand, where the act itself, and not the consequence of it, occasions the mischief, trespass is the proper remedy (z); therefore, where the defendant caused water to overflow the plaintiff's fishery, by throwing down a weir in the plaintiff's close, this was held to be a plain trespass (a). On the other hand, where the defendant dug ditches, and so diverted the plaintiff's water out of the river, an action on the case was brought; and it was moved to arrest the judgment, because it did not appear that the diversion of the water was consequential to the digging of the ditches, and therefore that trespass was the proper form; but the Court said, that the injury should be intended after the verdict to have been consequential (b); so, it has been held that where an injury has been done of a consequential nature, to the comfort and convenience of another, effected partly by an act of trespass, and partly by an act that was not a trespass, but from either of which the injury must and would have resulted, case may be maintained, Wells v. Ody (c); and it was said, in that case, "Suppose a person's premises are injured by the changing of a water-course, by the erection of a weir partly on the land of the plaintiff and partly on the land of the defendant, the erection of that which is on the plaintiff's land would be the subject of an action of trespass, and doing the same thing on the defendant's land would be the subject of an action on the case. If both acts are done at the same time, and form part of one res gesta, and the consequential damage is in respect of both together, it appears to me, that the plaintiff may bring his action of trespass, or his action on the case (d)." But it appears that trespass cannot be joined with case (e); yet the tenant may bring an action of trespass for the damage to his possession, and the reversioner an action on the case for the damage to the inheritance (f), for the reversioner cannot bring trespass for an injury to the possession (f). 434. The Courts seem to have leaned at all times to the action on the case, or at least to the right of electing either to sue for the trespass, or to waive that and sue for the consequential damage only; thus, in Whitting v. Beeway (g), it was held, that action on the case was maintainable against the defendant, for having erected a weir or bank, by means whereof the water of a certain stream overflowed the plaintiff's meadow; and it is there said, that the bank was laid as erected vi et armis, and not the overflowing, which was the injury there complained of; and in F. N. B. Trespass, 87, H., a similar injury was held to be the subject of trespass (h); and in Smith v. Goodwin (i), it was held, that though trespass might lie, yet a plaintiff was at liberty in every case to waive the trespass, and bring case for the consequential injury.

By action of covenant.

435. An action of covenant will, it seems, lie for an obstruction to a water-course, where the case will admit of it, although in Carlisle (Mayor) v. Blamire (k), where a party had sold to the corporation of Carlisle so much of the river Caldew running through his lands as should be sufficient for the grinding of corn at all times at the city mills, with a covenant that the grantor should not divert or obstruct any part of the water so granted, it was held, that the defendants, being only devisees of an equitable estate, could not be liable to an action of covenant as assignees.

By ejectment.

436. An action of ejectment will not lie for a water-course or rivulet, as such, because the sheriff cannot give possession of a thing which is for ever running (l); therefore, where error was brought on a judgment because ejectment had been maintained de aquæ cursu, it was reversed by the unanimous opinion of the Court (m); but it was said that such an action would lie for a gorce or pool, because those words comprehend both land and water (n); so, where the land under the water does not belong to the plaintiff, but the water, then an action on the case only can be brought for any diversion of it (n).

Assizes, &c.

437. Rights respecting water-courses may likewise be the subject of reference to arbitration (o).

By arbitration.

So, relief may in some cases be had in equity, where it could not be had at law; thus in the case of laches, as where a party stood by and saw his water-course diverted, but instead of preventing it, encouraged the work while it was going on, and afterwards brought his action, the defendant on his application to the Court of Chancery obtained an injunction (p). Short v. Taylor (p) is a similar case, in which Lord Somers also granted an injunction; so, in the case of long possession of a water-course by the plaintiff, the defendant having cut a channel in his own lands and set up a sluice so as to divert the stream, the Court on proof by the plaintiff decreed for him, without sending him to try his right at law (q); but as a rule, equity will not grant relief until the parties have tried their rights at law (r); so, if there have been laches, and the erections complained of have been suffered to remain any length of time, the Court will not interpose by injunction (s).

By relief in unless the plaintiff shew some actual damage resulting from the act to himself, it has been said that this rule ought to be applied to water-courses, and that therefore the mere obstruction of the water, which has been accustomed to flow through the plaintiff's lands, does not per se afford a ground of action, and that it is incumbent on the party complaining of the diversion of the stream to shew that he has sustained some damage thereby, and also that he has applied the water to some beneficial purpose (t).

Acquired by appropriation.

439. A person may gain a title to water in some cases by appropriation, and may maintain an action for obstructing it, although he has used the water for less than twenty years, as where he purchases land with a run of water upon it (u); or, where a proprietor of lands adjoining to a stream has altered the course of the stream, he may maintain an action, although he has not enjoyed it in its altered state for twenty years (x); so, the appropriator of a stream that has been accustomed to flow along a channel from time immemorial (y).

§ 445. The right to light and air depends upon the legal maxim, cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos, Right to light and air on one's own land.

From adjoining
land.

for every man on his own land has a right to all the light and air that will come to him; but this right is strictly confined to that which falls perpendicularly on the land, &c.; the reception of light and air in a lateral direction by the means of windows in a house is an easement; for although a man may build to the very extremity of his own land, yet within twenty years he acquires no right to light and air from the adjoining land, and it is competent to his neighbour to obstruct the passage of the light and air through his windows, by building against them on his own land, at any time during twenty years after their construction, and thus prevent the acquisition of the easement (u). But if the light be suffered to pass without interruption during that period to the building so erected, the law implies from the non-obstruction of the light for that length of time, that the owner of the adjoining land has consented, that the person who has erected the building upon his land shall continue to enjoy his light without obstruction, so long as he continues the specific mode of enjoyment which he had been used to have during that period (u).

Necessity of light and air;

but not of a prospect,

446. Light and air being necessary to the right enjoyment of a dwelling, it was held in an early case that an action would lie for obstructing them (v), unless it were by express agreement of the parties (v); sed secus as to a prospect, which is merely for pleasure (v); and so, on the authority of this case it was held, in Knowles v. Richardson, that building up a wall which merely intercepted the prospect, without stopping out the light, was not actionable (x); so, where a motion was made for an injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding with a certain building which would intercept the prospect from Gray's Inn Gardens, and it was alleged that the interposition of the Court was desired, not on the ground of a nuisance, but on a long enjoyment of right to this prospect by the society, Lord Hardwicke refused to grant an injunction before answer, adding, "I know no rule of common law, which says, that building so as to stop another's prospect is a nuisance; was that the case, there could be no great towns.... It depends upon a particular right, and then the party must first have an opportunity to answer. There may be such a right as this, as in the case of the Act of Parliament touching Lincoln's Inn; that was upon agreement of the parties, which if it was shewn here, it would be different (y);" but where the terms of a lease are in other respects complied with, and the lease is silent on the subject of any particular erections, it has been held, that under the circumstances it was not competent to the lessees of certain houses to object to the erection of a statue, on the ground that it would be an obstruction, Squire v. Campbell (x); and it was there said, "It is not, as is said in one case, (see 1 Dick. 175, and 16 Ves. 342), because the value of property may be lessened, and it is not, as is said in another case, (see 1 Dick. 175), because a pleasant prospect may be shut out, that this Court is to interfere; it must be an injury very different, in its nature and origin, to justify such an interference (a)."

agreement.

447. The right to the use of light may be acquired not only for the convenience of a dwelling, but also for the purposes of trade; therefore, where a building had been used for a long time as a malt-house, it was held, that no erection could be made which would obstruct the admission of the proper degree of light for the purpose of making malt (b); but it appears, that the use of an open space of ground for a purpose requiring light and air, as a timber-yard and saw-pit, for twenty years, did not give a right to preclude the owner of the adjoining ground from building on his land so as to obstruct the light and air (c); and it was said, "If such a plea could be sustained, it would follow, that a man might acquire a right to the light and air, not only as heretofore, by having been suffered to build on the edge of his property, and suffered for a certain space of time to enjoy that building without interruption, but merely by reason of having been in the habit of laying a few boards on his ground to dry. Such a rule would be very inconvenient, and very unjust (d)."

Custom of London.

449. By the custom of London, a man might rebuild his house or other edifice upon the ancient foundation to what height he pleased, though thereby the ancient lights of the adjoining house were stopped, if there were no agreement in writing to the contrary (f); but not any other erection upon a new soil, or upon any other foundation (g); as to the rights to light under the Prescription Act, see post, § 452; also Dig. it was held, that a stranger, having lands adjoining to a house newly erected, may stop the lights, for the building of a man on his land cannot hinder his neighbour from doing what he will with his own lands; but otherwise, if the messuage be ancient, so that he has gained a right in the lights by prescription; and in Cross v. Lewis (j) it is said, "A man may on his own land erect a house with windows looking towards his neighbour's premises; at first they may be obstructed, but if no interruption is offered, he may at length prescribe for them as ancient windows, and claim to have them free from obstruction, as in Bland v. Moseley, cited in Aldred's case, (9 Co. 57)" (k). So, in Penwarden v. Ching (l) it was held, that a window recently erected might have the privilege of an ancient window; and it is there said, "The question is not whether the window is strictly what is called an ancient window, but whether it is such as the law in indulgence to rights has, in modern times, so called, and to which the defendant has a right, for this is the substance of the plea (m)." sumption of an agreement not to obstruct them, Darwin v. Upton, cited 3 T. R. 159, and ever since this decision it has been held, that in the absence of any evidence to rebut that presumption, a jury should be directed to act upon it (o); and since the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, s. 3, (see Dig. P. m. tit. PRESCRIPTION), an absolute right to light may be acquired by an enjoyment without interruption for twenty years, as the eighth section of the act, providing for possession during particular periods, does not extend to lights; therefore, a right to lights may be established upon an enjoyment for nineteen years and a fraction, provided the action be brought before the interruption has continued for the full period of a year (p).

Acquiescence
by person entitled to the inheritance.

453. But, though an uninterrupted possession for twenty years or upwards was held, before the Prescription Act, the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, sufficient to presume a grant or agreement, yet the rule was, and still is, to be taken with this qualification, that the possession was with the acquiescence of the person entitled to the inheritance; therefore, the tenant for life has no power to grant any such right for a longer period than during the continuance of his particular estate (q); and it has been held, that the acquiescence of lessees or tenants for life in the enjoyment of lights did not bind the landlord or reversioner, unless they had knowledge and acquiesced for twenty years. And a presumption against the owner of lands was not so easily inferred in the case of lights, as in the case of rights of way or of common, where the tenant suffered an immediate injury; therefore, an enjoyment of lights for more than twenty years, during the occupation of the opposite premises by a tenant, did not conclude his landlord, who was ignorant of the fact, and consequently will not preclude a succeeding tenant, who was in possession under such landlord, from building up against such encroaching lights, Daniel v. North (r); and it is said, in that case, "The foundation of presuming a grant against any party is, that the exercise of the adverse right, on which such presumption is founded, was against the party capable of making the grant, and that cannot be presumed against him, unless there were some probable means of his knowing what was done against him (s);" so, where lights had been enjoyed for more than twenty years contiguous to land which, within that period, had been glebe land, but was conveyed to a purchaser under the 55 G. 3, c. 147, it was held, that no action would lie against such purchaser for building so as to obstruct the lights, inasmuch as the rector, who was only tenant for life, could not grant the easement, and therefore no valid grant could be presumed (t).

454. Whether a licence by deed is necessary to create a right to have light and air come from the land of an adjoining owner, does not appear to be settled, Bridges v. Blanchard (u); for in that case it was only decided, that a licence simply to set a ladder on the land of another could not be construed to extend by implication to making a window to look on the premises of the licensor (v).

Effect of alter-

§ 455. No alteration in the mode of enjoying light and air will be admitted, which tends to deprive the one party of his privilege, or to impose any additional burthen on the other party; therefore, if an ancient window be raised and enlarged, the owner of the adjoining land cannot lawfully obstruct the passage of light and air to any part of the space occupied by the ancient window, although a greater portion of light and air be admitted through the unobstructed part of the enlarged window than was anciently enjoyed, Chandler v. Thompson (x); and it was said in that case, "The whole of the space occupied by the old window was privileged, and it was actionable to prevent the light and air from passing through this, as it had formerly done. That part of the new window which constituted the enlargement might be lawfully obstructed; but the plaintiff was entitled to the free admission of light and air through the remainder of the window, without reference to what he might derive from other sources (y)." In a previous case (z), it had been held, that there being six lights in an old house, in the new there should be the same number of lights, of the same dimensions and in the same places; and it is there said, "They cannot alter the same to the prejudice of the soil, as if they were before so high as that they could not look out of them into the yard, they shall not make them lower, and the like (a). So, in Garritt v. Sharp (e), where the building in question had been for upwards of twenty years a barn, in which there were several apertures through which light and air passed, and the plaintiff turning the barn into a malt-house, stopped some of the holes, and converted others into lattice-windows, after which the defendant erected a wall which prevented the access not only of any additional light which might have been obtained by the alteration, but also, as the plaintiff alleged, of that quantity which had been obtained before the alteration; the jury found for the plaintiff, but a new trial was granted, on the ground, that "although the point was made, yet the jury were not required to consider whether the plaintiff had essentially varied the manner in which the light had been enjoyed."

two bow-windows in the same direction, but not in the same situation as the two former, it was held, that whatever privileges against the obstruction of light the two windows of the original house possessed, this privilege did not extend to the three new windows; and in this case it is said, "In whatever way precisely the right to enjoy the unobstructed access of light and air from adjoining land may be acquired, (a question of admitted nicety), still the act of the owner of such land, from which the right flows, must have reference to the state of things at the time when it is supposed to have taken place; and as the act of the one owner is inferred from the enjoyment of the other, it must in reason be measured by that enjoyment. The consent, therefore, cannot fairly be extended beyond the access of light and air through the same aperture (or one of the same dimensions or in the same position) which existed at the time such consent is supposed to have been given. It appears to us, that justice and convenience both require this limitation. If it were once admitted, that a new window varying in size, elevation, or position, might be substituted for an old one, without the consent of the owner of the adjoining land, it would be necessary to submit to juries questions of degree, often of a very uncertain nature, and upon very unsatisfactory evidence. And in the same case, a party who had acquiesced in the existence of a window of a given size, elevation, or position, because it was felt to be no annoyance to him, might be thereby concluded as to some other window, to which he might have the greatest objection, and to which he never would have assented, if it had come in question in the first instance. The case of Chandler v. Thompson (g) is not at all inconsistent with this reasoning. There an ancient window had been enlarged; the original aperture remained, and that case only decided that that aperture remained privileged as before the enlargement. We do not forget that the windows in the present case, whatever their privilege may be, do not § 459. Lost by Non-user.

Moore v. Rawson.

460. What amounts to Non-user.

§ 461. By altering the Mode of Enjoyment.

§ 458. There are two ways by which a right to light and air may be lost, namely, by non-user, and an alteration in the mode of enjoyment.

459. The right to the use of light and air, which a party has appropriated to himself, may be lost by mere non-user for a less period than twenty years, unless an intention of resuming the right within a reasonable time be shewn, when it ceased to be used; thus, where a person entitled to ancient lights pulled down his house, and erected a blank wall in the place of a wall in which there had been windows, and suffered such wall to remain blank for seventeen years, and the defendant erected a building against it, when the plaintiff opened a window in the same place, where there had formerly been a window in the old building, it was held, in an action for obstructing this new light, that it lay upon the defendant at least to shew, that, at the time when he so erected the blank wall, and thus apparently abandoned the windows which gave light and air to the house, it was not a perpetual but a temporary abandonment of the enjoyment, and that he intended to resume the enjoyment of those advantages within a reasonable period of time (i).

460. "The right to light and air, or water," (it is further said in that case (k), "is acquired by enjoyment, and will, as it seems to me, continue so long as the party either continues that enjoyment, or shews an intention to continue it. In this case the former owner of the plaintiff's premises had acquired a right to the enjoyment of the light, but he chose to relinquish that enjoyment, and to erect a blank wall, instead of the one in which there were formerly windows. At that time he ceased to enjoy the light in the mode in which he had used to do, and his right ceased with it (l). So, it has been held likewise, "If a man pulls down a house, and does not make any use of the land for two or three years, or converts it into tillage, he may be taken to have abandoned all intention of rebuilding the house, and consequently his right to the light has ceased. But if he builds upon the same site, and places windows in the same spot, or does any-thing to shew that he did not mean to convert the land to a different purpose, then his right would not cease (m)."

So, it had been previously held, that completely shutting up windows with bricks and mortar for above twenty years would destroy the privilege(n); and the plaintiff, by having opened an old window which had been thus blocked up, and thus brought a nuisance upon herself, had no right of action (n).

By altering the mode of enjoy-

461. In Garritt v. Sharp (o), it was held, that a party might so alter the mode in which he has been permitted to enjoy this kind of easement, as to lose the privilege altogether; but as to the effect of alterations in general, see ante, § 455 et seq.

463. In order to constitute, by building, an illegal obstruction of the plaintiff's ancient light, it is not necessary to shew a total privation of light; if the plaintiff can prove, that by reason of the obstruction, he cannot enjoy the light in so free and ample a manner as he did before, it will be sufficient (p); the question is, whether, in consequence of the obstruction, the plaintiff has less light than before, to so considerable a degree, as to injure the plaintiff's property in point of value or occupation (q); so, where one party has the enjoyment of light, and alterations are made in the adjoining buildings, it must appear that the privation of light is such as to prevent him, if he is in trade, from carrying on his business as beneficially as he had previously done (r).

464. Every interference with the light and air that may be enjoyed by the owner of an adjoining house is not unlawful; the opening a window, whereby a person's privacy is disturbed, is not actionable (s); so, building a wall, or otherwise obstructing a prospect, without obstructing the light, is not actionable (t).

When an ob-

467. So, where the owner of a house divided it into two tenements, and demised one of them to the defendant, retaining the other in his own occupation, it was held, in an action against the defendant for obstructing the plaintiff's lights, that the action was maintainable against a person holding as tenant, for an obstruction to a window existing in the landlord's house at the time of the demise, although of recent construction, and although there was no stipulation against the obstruction (b).

was not entitled to build to a greater height than one story, if by so doing he obstructed the upper windows of the plaintiff's house (d); and it was said, "It is well established by the decided cases, that where the same person possesses a house having the actual use and enjoyment of certain lights, and also possesses the adjoining land, and sells the house to another person, although the lights be new, he cannot, nor can any one who claims under him, build upon the adjoining land, so as to obstruct or interrupt the enjoyment of those lights. The sales to the plaintiff and defendant being sales by the same vendor, and taking place at one and the same time, we think the rights of the parties are brought within the application of the general rule of law (e)."

Blanchard v.
Bridges.

470. In Blanchard v. Bridges (f) it was held, that no licence or covenant from A., the owner of adjoining land, to put out or not to obstruct windows in the house of B., is to be inferred from the circumstance of A.'s being a party to the deed by which the house with the windows in it was conveyed to B., and by which deed A. conveyed part of the adjoining land to B., or from the circumstance of A.'s witnessing, without objection, the progress of the building; so, likewise, where A., in licensing B. to build to the extremity of B.'s ground, adjoining that of A., expressly reserved to himself the right of building to the extremity of his own ground, when he should think proper so to do, it was held, that A. might, at any time within twenty years, build to the extremity of his own land, though he thereby rendered the house of B. dark, damp, and unhealthy (f). If a party who has neglected to secure to himself the unobstructed enjoyment of light and air to a new window, by previous express licence or covenant, upon anything short of twenty years' acquiescence, the onus lies upon him to produce such evidence clearly and conclusively to the inference of a licence or covenant (f).

471. The injuries relating to the enjoyment of light and air are either such as arise from a person's putting out windows to the prejudice of his neighbour's privacy, or, which is more commonly the case, by interrupting others in the enjoyment of that light and air to which they are entitled; in the first of these cases, where a party's privacy is disturbed by his neighbour throwing out a window to overlook his premises, there appears to be no other remedy than to build on the adjoining land opposite the offensive window, Chandler v. Thompson (g); and it is there said, "Although an action for opening a window to disturb the plaintiff's privacy was to be read of in the books, I never knew such an action maintained; and when I was in the Common Pleas, I heard it laid down by Lord C. J. Eyre, that such an action did not lie (h)."

472. In the latter case above mentioned, when a party has acquired a right to the use of light, an action on the case lies for obstructing it (i); and the like remedy lies for rendering the air impure, as by the smell of hogs (i), and in this latter case the right of action lies not only for the disturbance of an easement, but also for an injury to the common law rights of property (k).

But every interference with the full enjoyment of an easement will not amount to a disturbance so as to sustain an action; it must be some sensible abridgement of the enjoyment; it is not sufficient that a ray or two of light is obstructed (l).

which a reversioner is allowed to bring his action for obstructions, apparently permanent, to lights and other easements which belong to the premises, is, that, if acquiesced in, they would become evidence of renunciation and abandonment (u); so, if the erection which caused the obstruction in the first instance was an injury to the reversion, on any ground on which it can be put, the continuance was held necessarily to be so likewise. The continuance of the obstruction would in fact render the proof of title more difficult at a future time, notwithstanding the former recovery (o); and in Jesser v. Gifford (p), which was an action by a reversioner for obstructing lights, it was held, that the tenant might bring the action in respect of the injury to his possession, and the reversioner in respect of his reversion, see further, ante, § 443.

Against a tenant or assignee.

perintends the erection of any nuisance; therefore, in an action on the case for obstructing the plaintiff's lights, it was held that a clerk who superintended the erection of the building by which they were darkened, and who alone directed the workmen, may be joined as a co-defendant with the original contractor; Wilson v. Peto and Hunter (s), where it is said, "In cases of that description, the action must be brought either against the hand committing the injury, or against the owner for whom the act was done;" but intermediate and subordinate persons are expressly exempted from responsibility by this case.

475. A Court of equity will grant an injunction to restrain any erection likely to darken or obstruct the ancient lights of any house (t); and it will be granted on affidavit of notice, but not on a motion in support of a particular right to a prospect (u); and the right to lights, as the ground for an injunction to stop the erection of buildings, must be founded on prescription, or else on some agreement or a reasonable presumption of one (v); so, the foundation of the jurisdiction to interfere by injunction must be such material injury to the comfort of those who dwell in the neighbouring house, as to require the application of a power to prevent, as well as to remedy an evil for which damages, more or less, would be given in an action at law (x). "The position of the building, whether opposite, at right angles, or oblique, is not material. The question is, whether the effect is such an obstruction as the party has no right to erect, and cannot erect without those mischievous consequences, which upon equitable principles should be not only compensated by damages, but prevented by injunction. Courts of equity will restrain the erection of buildings which would cause irreparable injury, as loss of health, loss of trade, or destruction of the means of existence, without waiting the slow process of establishing the legal right, when delay itself would be a wrong; but the plaintiff is bound to shew not only a legal right to the enjoyment of the ancient lights, but that, if the defendant is permitted to proceed, such an injury will ensue as will warrant the Court in interposing (a); and the Court will not interpose on certificate of a bill filed before answer, unless the injury is of a nature so pressing as not to admit of delay (a).

easement in an action (e); and upon a motion to dissolve the injunction, it was said, "As far as the model gives me any information upon the subject, and so far as I can form a conception from the dimensions of the intended buildings as they have been stated in the affidavits, I entertain no doubt whatever that the comfort of those who live in the houses now occupied by Mr. Tutton and Miss Jelfe would be most materially affected. I have, therefore, a case before me, in which, according to my own opinion, the building, if completed, would be a nuisance, and in which it is not by any means clear that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster would have a right to erect the building proposed, and in which it appears that Lady Montfort may not have the right, though the Dean and Chapter may have it. I think, therefore, that the injunction must be continued, but the matter must be tried (f)."

479. Where land is conveyed in fee, by deed of feoffment, subject to a perpetual ground-rent, and the feoffee covenants for himself, his heirs, administrators, and assigns, with the feoffor, the owner of the adjoining lands, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, not to use the land in a particular manner, with the view to the more ample enjoyment by the feoffor of such adjoining lands, and the subsequent acts of the feoffor, or those claiming under him, have so altered the character and condition of the adjoining lands, that, with reference to the land conveyed, the restriction in the covenant ceases to be applicable, according to the intent and spirit of the contract, a Court of equity will not interpose to enforce the covenant by granting an injunction to restrain the erection of additional buildings, but will leave the parties to their remedy (if they have any) at law (g).

SECTION X.

RIGHT TO PEWS AND OTHER EASEMENTS.

§ 480. There are several rights, which have been admitted either as prescriptive rights, or such as may be claimed by a grant, express or implied, which, as they are to be enjoyed on the land of another, have been classed among the number of easements; of these, the right to a pew or seat in the church deserves the first consideration.

May be claimed by Prescription or a Faculty.

 491. Faculty revocable.
 492. Faculty may be presumed.
 493. Possessory Right to a Pew.
 494. What is a Disturbance, and its Effect.
Right triable at Common Law.
 495. No Suit in Spiritual Court when Prescription is in question.
 496. When the Ordinary has Cognisance.
 497. Perturbation of Seat.

Under this head may be considered, first, how claimed; and, in the next place, disturbance of the right, and the remedies.

1. How claimed.

No property in pews.
May be claimed by prescription

§ 481. At common law there is no property in pews, they are erected for the use of the parishioners. The ordinary may by a faculty grant a pew to a particular person while he resides in the parish, or there may be a prescription which presupposes a faculty; but as to personal property in a pew, the law knows no such thing (h). Every man who settles as a householder has a right to call on the parish for a convenient seat (i).

or a faculty.

Although of common right the soil and freehold of the church is in the parson (k), yet the use of the body of the church and its repairs belong to the parishioners, and the disposing of the seats therein belongs to the ordinary, and therefore no one can claim a peculiar seat without special reason (k).

The parson, or rector impropriate, is entitled to the chief seat in the chancel (l); but a grant of part of the chancel by a lay impropriator has been held not good (m). "If this grant were good, it would take the chancel out of the jurisdiction of the ordinary (n)."

482. Parishioners are not at liberty to choose what seats they like; the distribution of seats among them rests in the discretion of the ordinary, who, it is said, may place and displace whomsoever he pleases (o). This discretion is commonly exercised by the churchwardens, who are the officers of the ordinary, as well as those of the parish (p). To exclude the ordinary from his jurisdiction, it was necessary, before the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, not merely that a possession should be shewn for many years, but that the pew should have been built and repaired time out of mind (q).

Disposition of the seats.

good, and a prohibition will lie if the ordinary interpose (s); and the churchwardens must shew some particular reason why they are to order the pews exclusively of the ordinary, for a general allegation, that the parishioners have used to repair and build all the seats in the church, and by reason thereof the churchwardens have used to order and dispose the seats, is not sufficient to take away the ordinary's power in disposing and ordering the seats, because this is no more than the parishioners are bound to do of common right, to wit, building and repairing the seats, for which they have the easement and convenience of sitting in them (t).

Duty of the churchwardens.

The authority of the churchwardens must be exercised justly and discreetly, or they may be corrected by the ordinary (u). They should place the parishioners according to their station (x); and they cannot exercise this right in opposition to every legal and equitable claim (y).

Particular rights.

Prescriptive right.

484. A right to a pew in a church is an easement (z), and a person claiming such right must shew either a faculty or a prescription (a). It must be claimed as appurtenant to a messuage within the parish, and the occupancy of it must pass with the house, and individuals cannot, by contract between themselves, defeat the general right of the parish (b); so, a faculty is only to the first grantee, and cannot be transferred by him (c), for a seat in the church belongs not to the person, but to the house, and therefore a grant to a man and his heirs is bad in point of law (d); so, where there is a prescriptive right, it cannot be exercised by transferring to persons not inhabitants of the house or parish (e).

INCORPORAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

So, a seat cannot be claimed by prescription as appendant to land, but to a house, for the seat belongs to the house in respect of the inhabitants thereof (f). Extra-parochial persons, therefore, cannot establish a claim to a seat in the body of a parish church without proof of a prescriptive title, if they can establish it even by prescription (g); but a pew in an aisle or chancel may belong to a non-parishioner (h), for the case of an aisle or chancel depends upon, and is governed by, other considerations (i); and in Davis v. Writts (k), it was held, that a pew in the aisle of a church may be prescribed for as appurtenant to a house out of the parish.

Appendant to a house, not to land.

There is no such thing as a right to a pew in gross or at large; it is a right which can only be held as appurtenant to a messuage, and enjoyed by a person only so long as he continues to inhabit such messuage (l); therefore, a pew annexed by prescription to a messuage cannot, as has been erroneously imagined, be severed from the occupancy of the house, but passes with the messuage, the tenant of which for the time being has de jure the prescriptive right to the pew (m), and it cannot be sold or let without an Act of Parliament (n); therefore, where an occupier of a pew ceases to be an inhabitant of a parish, he cannot let the pew with, and thus annex it to his house, but it reverts to the churchwardens for their disposal (n); and a custom pleaded that pews are appurtenant to certain houses, and are let by the owner to persons who are not inhabitants of the parish, is bad (o); so, a permission by churchwardens for a person to sit in a pew temporarily, in order by keeping possession for the future tenant to carry into effect the conditions of sale of a house, is illegal as confirming a sale of the pew (p); but if a house to which a pew is appurtenant be let to a parishioner, in that character he is clearly entitled to the pew (q).

tionable.

485. The right to sit in a particular pew, when created by a faculty, may be apportioned; therefore, where a faculty was granted to a man and his family, as owner and occupier of a certain dwelling-house, and the house was afterwards divided, the occupier of one part of the dwelling-house, though a very small part, was held to have some right, and therefore might maintain an action against the churchwardens for disturbing him in the enjoyment of it, Harris v. Drewe (r); and it was there said, the plaintiff having a right to use the pew, the churchwardens had no right to interfere as they did, and they were wrong-doers. "It may certainly happen, in consequence of a house having been subdivided, that three or four families may become entitled to the use of a pew belonging to the original messuage, and they may require more accommodation, and a question may arise how many persons are entitled to use the pew in respect of each of the subdivisions. That is, however, a matter to be settled among themselves (s)."

Priority of a seat to be prescribed for.

486. As a seat in a church may be prescribed for, so also may a priority of seat; thus it was declared in the case of Carlton v. Hutton (t). The Archbishop of York sent an inhibition to Carlton, until the matter should be determined before him, but prescription was surmised, and thereupon prohibition obtained, because as well priority of seat, as the seat itself, may be claimed by prescription (u); so, priority in a seat in the body or aisle of the church may be appro-

INCORPORAL

487. It is necessary in the case of prescription to shew, that the use and occupation of the seat have from time immemorial been appurtenant to a certain messuage (y); a prescriptive right must be clearly proved, the facts must not be equivocal, and they must be such as are not inconsistent with the general right (y). Where a prescription is interrupted, a jury is not bound to presume a faculty from long undisturbed possession (z).

Prescription,
how to be proved.

488. Reparation from time to time is necessary to be pleaded and proved, in order to make out a prescription (a); if, therefore, a person prescribe that he and his ancestors, and all they whose estate he hath, have used to sit in a certain seat in the nave of the church time out of mind, in consideration that they have used time out of mind to repair the said seat, this is a good prescription, and the ordinary cannot displace him (b); so, if any repairs have been required within memory, it must be proved that they have been made at the expense of the party setting up the prescription. The onus and beneficium are supposed to go together; mere occupancy does not prove the right (c), and mere repairing for thirty or forty years will not exclude the ordinary (d); so, lining and putting new cushions into pews are not repairs, but mere ornament; these are not usually done by the parish (e).

reparation.

489. In courts of common law mere occupation or user, or, as it is more properly called, possession, if long continued, has been considered sufficient evidence for a jury to presume a faculty; therefore, in Rogers v. Brooks (f), a thirty-six years' exclusive possession was held sufficient presumptive evidence of a prescriptive right, although the church had been rebuilt about forty years before; but in Stocks v. Booth (g) it was held, that possession for above sixty years of a pew in a church was not a sufficient title to maintain an action upon the case for disturbance in the enjoyment of it, and that the plaintiff must prove a prescriptive right or a faculty, and should claim it as appurtenant to a messuage; so, in Griffith v. Matthews (h), where there was thirty years' mere possession, the seat, which was before open, having been built and inclosed during that time, it was left to a jury to consider whether, under all the circumstances of the case, this pew so erected was appurtenant to the plaintiff's messuage; the jury found for the defendant and the Court refused a new trial. It was there said, "If it had not appeared when and at whose expense this pew was built, or that it had not been a pew before 1758, possession from that time would have been sufficient evidence to have warranted the jury in presuming that a faculty had been granted (i)." See also Morgan v. Curtis (k), where a prescription for a seat was held to be destroyed by shewing that it was an open seat upwards of fifty years ago, but now, by the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, a claim to a pew after twenty years is not to be defeated by shewing its commencement prior to that time, see Dig. P. III. tit. PRESCRIPTION.

Faculty.

Different kinds.

490. A pew may be annexed to a house by a faculty, as well as by prescription (l). Faculties for the exclusive use of pews are of different descriptions; as to a man and his family, so long as they continue inhabitants of a certain house, or so long as they continue inhabitants generally; or appropriating certain pews to certain messuages or farmhouses, or faculties at large: the first is considered the proper form of a grant of this description, and is the most usual in modern times (m); the second is objectionable, as it often entitles parishioners to the exclusive occupancy when they are no longer in a situation to be suitable occupants, whatever their ancestors may have been (n); the third sort is considered as the foundation of the prescriptive claims recognised at common law (o). The last kind of faculties appear to be merely void, as no faculty will be supported either at common law or in the ecclesiastical courts to the extent of entitling any person who is a non-parishioner to a seat in the body of the church (p).

INCORPORAL
HEREDITA-

491. It seems now to be settled that a faculty obtained by surprise and undue connivance may be revoked (q), but the superior courts are reluctant to interfere with the inferior courts in matters of faculty, Woolcombe v. Ouldridge (r), where it was observed that faculties are generally so much within the discretion of the local judge, that there must be a considerable degree of general inconvenience to induce a reversal of his decree.

Faculty revocable.

When a faculty limited to a certain period expires, the right of the parishioners revives to the pews which were the subject of the faculty (s).

492. A faculty, like a prescription, may be presumed, but mere possession, though long continued, will not always be sufficient; therefore, where a pew in a chancel, claimed in right of a messuage, was shewn to have been erected on the site of old open seats in 1773, and there was no evidence of any faculty, it was held, that the judge rightly directed the jury, that the evidence of the former open state of the seats destroyed the prescription, and left it to them to say whether, upon the evidence merely of long undisturbed possession, any faculty might be presumed, and a new trial was refused (t).

Possessory right to a pew.

493. Besides the right to a pew, acquired either by a faculty or a prescription, there is another sort of right which has been termed "possessory." This, by the ecclesiastical courts, is held sufficient to maintain a suit against a mere wrong-doer, and as the fact of possession implies either the virtual or actual authority of those having power to place, the disturber must shew that he has been placed there by such authority, or must justify his disturbance by shewing a paramount right, a right paramount to the ordinary himself, namely, a faculty (u); the possession will have its weight, and the ordinary will give preference to a person in possession cæteris paribus over a mere stranger (u); and a possessory title is sufficient ground for resisting a faculty (x); but this right is only co-extensive in duration with actual possession, and if this be abandoned the whole ceases (y).

2. Disturbance of the Right, and the Remedies.

What is a disturbance, and its effect.

494. Where a pew is claimed as annexed to a house either by faculty or prescription, the courts of common law exercise jurisdiction on the ground that a disturbance of a right to a pew is a detriment to the occupation of a house to which it is annexed (z); so, where the pew is in a chan- cel, the freehold of an individual, the right to it is triable at common law (a), and it is properly triable by an action on the case (b); so, it is agreed that the plaintiff need not shew reparation in his declaration, but he ought to prove reparation in evidence (b); but trespass will not lie for disturbance of a man's right to a pew, because the plaintiff has not exclusive possession, the freehold being in the parson (c); but such action can only be maintained on proof of a faculty, or by such evidence as fairly leads to the presumption of a faculty; possession merely is not sufficient to support such an action (d).

495. In all cases of prescriptions for seats the ordinary has nothing to do with the matter, but it is solely determinable at the common law (e); and therefore, if a suit be commenced in the spiritual court, upon the account of prescription, a prohibition will lie for the party sued, because, whether the prescription be good or not, is not in the spiritual court to judge (f); but the spiritual courts may proceed upon libels grounded upon prescriptions, where the prescription is not denied (g); and the defendant, if he will, may admit the prescription to be tried, as the defendant does a modus or a pension by prescription (h); so, an action at common law will not lie for disturbing another in the possession of a pew unless the pew be annexed to a house in a parish (i), the disturbance in that case, not concerning the freehold, is matter for ecclesiastical cognizance only (i); so, if a man claiming title by prescription to an aisle, chancel, &c., as his freehold, or to a pew or seat in the body of the church, or in an aisle, &c., as appurtenant to a house in the parish, is disturbed therein by the ordinary, or other, by a suit in the spiritual court, he may have a prohibition, if he suggest as grounds for it, that he, or those whose estate he hath, built or time out of mind repaired the same, and therefore had the sole use of such pew (k).

496. If a party has not a title by prescription, the ordinary has conusance of any disturbance of a man's possession, which is called "perturbation of a man's seat," and may quiet the same (l); and the ecclesiastical court will admonish a wrong-doer not to disturb a person in the possession of a pew, although the latter has no well-founded title to it (m); so, in a possessory action against a stranger and a wrong-doer, the plaintiff is not obliged to prove any repairs done by himself or others whose estate he hath (m), for it is a rule of law that one in possession need not shew any title or consideration for such possession against a wrong-doer; but it is otherwise where one claims a pew or an aisle against the ordinary, for he has prima facie the disposing of all the seats in the church; therefore, against him a title or consideration must be shewn in the declaration, and proved as to the building and repairing (n).

seat.

497. Perturbation of seat is a civil proceeding, which a party may have who has been disturbed in the possession and enjoyment of his seat, whether the disturbance proceeds from the churchwardens or a mere intruder; but against the churchwardens there is another remedy afforded by the ecclesiastical court, which has been termed "a convenient remedy," namely, that of citing the churchwardens to shew cause why they have not seated certain persons suitably to their condition, which mode was adopted in Walker v. Gunner (o), and approved of by Lord Stowell (o).

Griffiths* (u); so, a burying-place may be prescribed for as belonging to a manor, and an action may be brought by the lord for disturbance of his burying there (x); and the same rules are applicable to vaults as to pews (y), therefore, a right to make a vault and have the sole and exclusive use, if it could be granted by a rector, would be an easement (y); but it seems that a rector can make no such grant, he can only give a licence each several time (y).

Harrison* (a), where it is said, "It may be true that if my land adjoins that of another, and I have not by building increased the weight upon my soil, and my neighbour digs in his land, so as to occasion mine to fall in, he may be liable to an action (b);" but if A., seised in fee of land closely adjoining the land of B., erect a new house on the confines of such land, and B. afterwards dig his land so near to the foundation of A.'s house that it falls into the pit, still no action lies by A. against B., inasmuch as it was the fault of A. himself that he built his house so near the Abr. (e). The judgment will, therefore, be for the defendant (f)."

Scott (i), where a party built a house on his own land which had been previously excavated to its extremity for mining purposes, he did not acquire a right to support from the adjoining land of another, at least not until twenty years had elapsed since the house first stood on the excavated land and was in part supported by the adjoining land, so that a grant by the owner of the adjoining land of such right to support might be inferred; and in this case it was said, "Rights of this sort, if they can be established at all, must, we think, have their origin in grant. If a man builds his house at the extremity of his land, he does not thereby acquire any right of easement, for support or otherwise, over the land of his neighbour. He has no right to load his own soil so as to make it require the support of that of his neighbour, unless he has some grant to that effect; Wyatt v. Harrison (j) is precisely in point as to this part of the case; and we entirely agree with the opinion there pronounced (k)."

"In this case, if the land, on which the plaintiff's house was built, had not been previously excavated, the defendants might, without injury to the plaintiff, have worked their coal to the extremity of their own land, without even leaving a rib of ten yards, as they have done. And if the plaintiff had not built his house on excavated ground, the mere sinking of the ground itself would have been without injury. He has, therefore, by building on ground insufficiently supported, caused the injury to himself, without any fault on the part of the defendants, unless at the time, by some grant, he was entitled to additional support from the land of the defendants. There are no circumstances in the case from which we can infer any such grant as to the new house, because it has not existed twenty years; nor as to the old house, because, though erected more than twenty years, it does not appear that the coal under it may not have been excavated within twenty years; and no grant can at all events be inferred, nor could the right to any easement become absolute, even under Lord Tenterden's Act, (the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71, see Dig. P. III. tit. PRESCRIPTION), until after the lapse of at least twenty years from the time when the house first stood on excavated ground, and was supported in part by the defendants' land (1)."

"If the law stood as it did before Lord Tenterden's Act, (a 2, sup.), we should say that such a grant ought not to be inferred from any lapse of time short of twenty years, after the defendants might have been or were fully aware of the facts. And even since that act, the lapse of time, under these peculiar circumstances, would probably make no material difference; for the proper construction of that act requires, that the easement should have been enjoyed for twenty years under a claim of right. Here neither party was acquainted with the fact that the easement was used at all; for neither party knew of the excavation below the house. We should probably have been of opinion, that there was no user of the easement under a claim of right, and that Lord Tenterden's Act, therefore, would not apply to a case like this."

"We think, upon the whole, that the defendants are entitled to our judgment (1)."

503. This principle appears also to be extended to the right to support from buildings, as well as from land; therefore, in case by a reversioner of a house in Cheapside against the owner of the adjoining house, for pulling it down without shoring up the plaintiff's house, in consequence whereof it was impaired and in part fell down, it was held, first, that, upon this declaration, the plaintiff could not recover on the ground of the defendant's not having given notice that he was about to pull down his house, that not being alleged as a cause of the injury; secondly, that,

Brown v.

504. Where an easement of this kind has been given, the owner of the premises can only use his rights subject to such easement; if, therefore, a party grant an easement, and then act so that it cannot be enjoyed, an action lies against him, as where a plaintiff had rested his house upon a pine-end belonging to the defendant, and this had been originally done by permission of the owner of the wall, it was held, that where the defendant, by excavating near his pine-end wall, caused it to sink, so that the plaintiff's house which rested against it was injured, an action against him was supported (n).

Walters v.

505. It appears that, where there is no claim of an easement, the owner of premises adjoining those pulled down must shore up his own in the inside, and do every thing proper to be done upon them for their preservation (o), but still the omission so to do will not excuse negligence on the part of those taking down the adjoining house (o), and although the foundation of the plaintiff's house was proved to be rotten; yet in Dodd v. Holme (p) it is said, "A man has no right to accelerate the fall (q);" and in Trower v. Chadwick (r), it is laid down, that "although a man may have no right of support from the building of his neighbour, yet if the latter choose to withdraw such support, he must take reasonable and proper care in so doing, and for negligence and unskilfulness he is liable to an action."

Ryding*(t), where there had been a grant of the minerals under the land, and the defendant removed them in such a manner as to cause the surface of the earth to fall in, this was held to be a violation of the easement of support which the plaintiff was entitled to, being the entire removal of the inferior strata, which, however done, was actionable.

The easements of the more important kind, as commons, ways, and water, are created either by grant or by prescription which supposes a grant, and uninterrupted possession or enjoyment has long been held to be sufficient evidence to be left to a jury to presume a grant (f); but, as to the minor rights above-mentioned, they have been created for the most part by licence, and questions have arisen where the licence was by parol, whether any right of this kind could be thereby created, and it seems to be now settled, that easements, like all other incorporeal hereditaments, must be under seal, therefore, a licence by the lord of a manor to build a cottage on the waste gave no estate to the grantee, *R. v. a drain there, cannot confer a title (s).” A distinction was there taken in argument which had in some cases been admitted between an agreement executed and one executory, but the argument did not prevail, see infra, § 521.

Whistler.*

520. In Bryan v. Whistler (t), the right to be buried in a particular vault was held to be an easement which could be created by deed only; and therefore, a parol licence was held to confer no right, though the plaintiff had paid a valuable consideration on the faith of the agreement.

So, in an earlier case, a right to carry on a noisy trade was held not to be gained by a parol licence (x).

But it is not settled whether a parol licence will confer an easement of light and air (y).

Licence executed not revocable.

521. The rule that a parol licence is revocable admits of exceptions upon different grounds, as, first, where the licence has been executed, in distinction from cases where it is executory only; in the next place, where the licence does not confer a freehold interest; and thirdly, where it operates to extinguish an easement. The principal case of the first kind is Winter v. Brockwell (z), where a parol licence to put a skylight over the defendant's area (which impeded the light and air from coming to the plaintiff's dwelling through a window) could not be recalled at pleasure after it had been executed at the defendant's expense, at least not without tendering the expenses he had been put to, and therefore no action lay as for a private nuisance in stopping the light and air, &c., and communicating a stench from the defendant's premises to the plaintiff's house by means of such skylight. But this case is said to be clearly distinguishable from the present (Hewlins

v. Shippam) (a). All that the defendant there did, he did upon his own land. He claimed no right or easement upon the plaintiff's. The plaintiff claimed a right and easement against him, viz. the privilege of light and air through a parlour window, and a free passage for the smells of an adjoining house through defendant's area; and the only point there decided was, that, as the plaintiff had consented to the obstruction of such his easement, and had allowed the defendant to incur expense in making such obstruction, he could not retract that consent without reimbursing the defendant that expense. But that was not the case of the grant of an easement to be exercised upon the grantor's land, but a permission to the grantee to use his own land in a way in which, but for an easement of the plaintiff's, such grantee would have had a clear right to use it (b)."

522. In Liggins v. Inge (c), which was the case of a parol licence to erect a weir, the Court held it not to be revocable, on the ground that it had been executed. "There is a clear distinction between a licence to do something which in its own nature seems intended to be permanent, and by which expense is incurred, and a licence to do acts which consist in repetition, as to walk in a park, to use a carriage-way, to fish in the waters of another, or the like; which licence, if countermanded, the party is but in the same situation as he was before it was granted; but this is a licence to construct a work which is attended with expense to the party using the licence, so that, after the same is countermanded, the party to whom it was granted may sustain a heavy loss, and it was the fault of the party himself, if he meant to reserve the power of revoking such licence after it was carried into effect, that he did not expressly reserve that right (d)."

Inge.*

523. In Wallis v. Harrison (e), the same distinction between agreements executed and executory is recognized, therefore, a parol licence from A. to B. to enjoy an easement, as to make a railway over A.'s land, was held countermandable at any time while it was executory; and if A. conveyed the land to another, the licence was determined at once, without notice to B. of the transfer, and B. was liable in trespass if he afterwards entered upon the land.

Licence not conferring a freehold interest.

Wood v. Lake.

524. In the next place, a licence not conferring a freehold interest in land has been held not revocable, as in Wood v. Lake (f), which was a licence to stack coals on the close of another for seven years, and it was there held, that it could not be revoked at the end of three years; so, in Webb v. Paternoster (g), which was a licence to lay a stack of hay on the land of Sir W. Plummer for a reasonable time, afterwards Sir W. Plummer leased the land, and the lessee turned in his cattle and ate the hay, for which an action was brought, and the whole Court held that such licence was good, and could not be countermanded within a reasonable time, but that more than a reasonable time had elapsed, (half a year), and therefore the licence was at an end.

525. So, in Taylor v. Waters (h), which was an action against the door-keeper of the Opera-House, for denying admission to the plaintiff, who was the holder of a silver ticket purporting to give him an entrance into that theatre for twenty-one years, it was objected that the right claimed was an interest in land, and being for more than three years could not pass without a writing signed by the party, or his agent authorized in writing, and moreover, that being an incorporeal hereditament it could only pass by deed; the Court, however, held, that it was not such an interest in land as to require a deed, being only a licence irrevocable to permit the plaintiff to enjoy certain privileges thereon, and did not require to be in writing by the Statute of Frauds, though it extended beyond the term of three years; and after citing Wood v. Lake (i), Webb v. Paternoster (j), and Winter v. Brockwell (k), it was added, "These cases abundantly prove that a licence to enjoy a beneficial interest in land may be granted without deed (l)." So, in Hewlins v. Shippam (m), it is said, "Webb v. Paternoster, Wood v. Lake, and Taylor v. Waters (n), were not cases of freehold interest, and in none of them was the objection taken that the right lay in grant, and therefore could not pass without deed. These, therefore, cannot be considered as authorities upon the point; and on these grounds, therefore, that the right claimed by the declaration (in this case) is a freehold right, and that if the thing claimed is to be considered as an easement, and not an interest in the land, such a right cannot be created without deed, we are of opinion that the nonsuit was right, and that the rule ought to be discharged (o);" but see Williams v. Morris (p).

526. When a licence operates to extinguish an easement, it has also been held not to be revocable, as where permission was given to a man to erect a weir on his own land, which was incompatible with the continuance of the easement of water over it, to which the licensor was entitled (q); for "there is nothing unreasonable in holding that a right which is gained by occupancy may be lost by abandonment (r)." It is here assumed that a right to water is gained by mere occupancy, but this point has since been much discussed as to the extent to which it ought to be carried, see ante, § 417.

nuisance.

527. On the subject of easements generally, it remains only to observe, that many acts done upon or in respect of the land of another, which, as being injurious, would be actionable nuisances, may, after the requisite period of enjoyment, become lawful, and the party acquire a prescriptive title to them as easements; thus a right not to have water discharged upon one's land is an incident of property, and the infringing of that right is actionable, but a right to let water off, even in an impure state, may be acquired, like any other easement, by user(s); so, a right to wholesome untainted air is at common law a right appurtenant to a house, and the communicating noisome smells is a nuisance, unless the business which creates the nuisance has been carried on there for so great a length of time, that the law will presume a grant from the neighbours in favour of the party who causes it(t); so, user may justify the exercise of a noisy trade(u); but nothing less than twenty years' user will suffice to legalize a nuisance, and, therefore, where a defendant alleged a user of only three years, judgment was given against him(t).

nuisance.

528. But whether, if the party complaining come to the nuisance, he have any right of action for the injury sustained thereby is not settled. It has been said, "If my neighbour makes a tan-yard so as to annoy and render less salubrious the air of my house or garden, the law will furnish me with a remedy; but if he is first in possession of the air, and I fix my habitation near him, the nuisance is of my own seeking, and may continue(v);" and this doctrine seems to derive some authority from *Moore v. Different kinds of offices.
Civil and mili-

Public and private.

531. Offices are distinguished according to the nature of their respective trusts into civil and military (h); and again they are divided into public and private, not so much from the extent of the authority, as from the nature of the duty, R. v. Burnell (i), where it was a question whether a censor of the College of Physicians was such an officer as ought to take the oaths under the 25 C. 2, c. 2, a public officer being one whose duty concerned the revenue or the peace of the realm, and a private officer, one whose duty respected the concerns of individuals, of which kind it was contended that the censorship of the college ought to be reckoned (i).

So, after much discussion a mandamus was granted to restore an attorney of the court of the city of Canterbury, who had been removed by the mayor, on the ground that the office of attorney is a public office which concerns the administration of justice (j).

Ancient and modern offices.

532. Offices are also distinguished, in respect of their antiquity, into ancient and modern, or those of new creation. And herein it is observable that constant usage hath not only sanctified the first establishment of such offices as have existed time out of mind, but also hath prescribed and settled the manner in which they have and are to exist, in what manner to be exercised, and how to be disposed of, &c. (k); and a usage short of what may be legally set up by prescription will be sufficient for this purpose, "for new usages and new customs grow up, and by continuance get firm root in a time much short of legal prescription (l)."

533. Offices are again distinguished into judicial and ministerial only; the first, relating to the administration of justice or the performance of duties that require deliberation and judgment, ought to be filled by persons of sufficient capacity and property, who must personally execute the office or trust reposed in them (n). But with respect to ministerial offices, they may be executed by persons physically capable of performing the duty required, as infants, &c. (o)

Judicial and ministerial offices.

By the ancient common law, officers ought to be "honest men, legal and sage, qui melius sciant et possint officio illo intendere," it being the policy of prudent antiquity (says my Lord Coke), that officers should ever give grace to the place, and not the place to the officer (p). from immemorial usage (r); but, since the 34 E. 1, the queen cannot erect a new office with new fees, for that would be a tallage upon the subject, which cannot be done without consent of Parliament(s); so, for the same reason, new fees cannot be annexed to an old office; so, generally, no new office can be erected for the benefit of a private man except by Parliament, for officers are chosen by law or prescription, and the law or custom is changed only by Parliament(t), therefore, an office granted by letters patent for the sole making of bills, informations, and letters missive in the council of York, was held unreasonable and void(u); so, no new powers or privileges can be annexed to any office already in being, but they must be executed according to the rules prescribed and established by law, therefore, although the queen may grant the office of sheriff to hold during pleasure, yet she cannot abridge his authority while in office(v); and it has been held, that, in the constitution of a new office, it is not necessary that an annual or casual fee should be annexed to such office(x).

To hold courts of equity not grantable.

535. The queen, it seems, cannot grant to any person to hold a court of equity, although she may grant tenere placita, for the dispensation of equity is a special trust, not to be committed to any except her Chancellor(y). It is said, however, that courts of equity may be holden by prescription(z), but this has been disputed, see Bac. Abr. tit. Office, (L).

It is also said, that counties palatine, to which courts of equity have been considered incident, may be created by the king alone without the aid of Parliament, but the weight of authority appears to be against this position.

The grant of an office comprehends—

1. The form of the grant.
2. By whom grantable.
3. For what period grantable.

1. Form of the Grant.

§ 536. Ancient offices cannot be granted in other manner or form than is usual, unless the form be altered by Parliament, as creating by writ, where before it was created by statute (a), or for life, where always before it was granted at will only (b); so, the grant of an office und cum fœdis pertinent, does not grant any fees if it be not an office by prescription (c); so, grant of an office to a bishop for life, is not a grant to his successors, for he takes the office in his natural, not his political capacity, and therefore the grant over to his successors is void (d). In the grant of the mastership of an hospital, words of nomination only are sufficient, for he shall be in by the original constitution upon the foundation (e).

Grantable by
the queen

queen consort.

2. By whom Grants of Office may be made.

537. Although the nomination of all offices was originally in the Crown, yet there may be a power of granting in a queen dowager, or queen consort, or other subject; and as between a queen dowager and a queen consort it is laid down in Atkins v. Montague (f), "That tho' here the question is touching the interest of a queen dowager in the patronage, when there is no queen consort, yet it seemed to him that if there be a queen dowager and a queen consort both at the time of the voidance of the hospital, the queen dowager shall present. If the dowager's grant be good when there is a queen consort, it is much more so when there is none (g)."

By the principal officer.

538. Where one office is incident to another, such incident office is regularly grantable by him who hath the principal office; thus, the office of county clerk being incident to the office of sheriff (h), and chamberlain of the Queen's Bench Prison (now the Queen's Prison, 5 & 6 V. c. 22, see Dig. P. III. tit. PRISONS) incident to the office of marshal (i), and exigenter of the counties incident to the office of Chief Justice of the Common Pleas (k), neither of these offices can be granted by any other than the principal; therefore, a grant of the office of marshal, with a reservation of the office of chamberlain, was held void (l); so, the grant of the office of exigenter by the king, even during a vacancy of the chief justiceship, was held void, and by reason of prescription and usage (m).

Appointments

Bishops, and other ecclesiastical persons, may also grant offices, not only during their lives, but also in many cases so as to bind the successor, as where the office is ancient and of necessity, and cannot be exercised by the bishop in person, it may be granted so as to bind the successor (p), with the accustomed fees for exercising it (p); and it has been said that where the office is ancient, the grant of such office and fee, with the addition of a new fee, is good (p); but this point is disputed (q).

545. Offices which are incident to others cannot be separated, so as for one to be granted and the other reserved (b). Also, what is incident to an office will pass with it; if, therefore, a house or land belong to an office, it will pass by the grant of the office, without being expressly named (c).

3. For what Period an Office may be granted.

547. Offices with respect to their duration are distinguished according as they are granted to a man and his heirs, or to a man for life, for years, or at will.

Offices of inheritance.

Those offices only are allowed to descend as inheritances where no inconvenience can ensue therefrom to the public, as the office of Earl Marshal of England, the offices of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, sheriff, &c. (k); but, where a person has any office in himself and his heirs, he may grant them to one, in remainder to another for life, for omne majus continet in se minus, for as they are grantable in fee, so they may be granted in succession to one for life with remainder over (l).

Offices for life.

548. At common law all officers of justice had a life estate, and could not be removed but for misconduct, and it was the same of the office of clerk of the Crown, both in the Queen's Bench and in Chancery, and the clerks of the Exchequer, and the filacer in the Common Pleas, "In which respect (says Lord Coke) the wisdom and policy of the law was very great, because, when men held their offices for life, it was an encouragement to the faithful execution of their duty; it was then, also, that they endeavoured to acquire knowledge and experience in their employments, having a durable and fixed estate therein, and not liable to be displaced at the pleasure of those who put them in (m)."
For this reason it is, that the law construes the grants of offices favourably for the grantee; therefore, if an office be granted to a man to have and enjoy so long as he shall behave himself well in it, the grantee has an estate for life, for as nothing but his misbehaviour can determine his interest, no man can prefix a shorter period than his life, since it must be his own act alone (which the law does not presume to foresee) which can make his estate of shorter continuance (n); so, if the office be granted to a man quamdiu se bene gesserit tantum, his estate will not be the less for the word tantum (n).

Though by the 37 H. 8, c. 1, s. 3, and 1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 21, it is provided, that the custos rotulorum shall appoint and nominate the clerk of the peace, who may execute it by himself or deputy, for so long time only as he shall demean himself well, yet it has been held that the clerk has an office for life, and that it does not determine with the office of the custos (o); and so, the judges of the several courts at Westminster (who formerly held their places durante bene placito or at will (p)), now, since the 12 W. 3, which provides that their commissions shall be quamdiu se bene gesserint, hold their places for life, and can be removed only upon the address of both Houses of Parliament; so, before the 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 27, the patents of the judges, sheriffs, and commissioners of oyer and terminer, &c. were determined by the demise of the Crown, but by that act, amended by the 1 Anne, c. 1, all patent officers are continued for six months after the demise of the Crown, and by the 1 G. 3, c. 23, it is declared that the offices of the judges shall in nowise be affected by such demise.

deed, grant the stewardship of the manor and of the courts thereto belonging, for the life of the grantee; in which case the doctrine as laid down by Lord Coke (s) is recognized, where he says, "If a man grant to another the office of the stewardship of the courts of his manor, with a certain fee, the grantor cannot discharge him of his service and attendance, because he hath profits which he should lose if he were discharged of his office (s);" but it appears that where a plaintiff does not allege that there is any profit belonging to his office, he may be discharged by the vendee of a manor (t); so, to all grants for life of such an office as the parkership of a park and the like, a condition in law is annexed, that he should do what appertains to such office to be done (u).

Grants for years.

551. An office of trust and confidence, which concerns the administration of justice, such as the keepership of a prison, cannot be granted for years, for if it were granted for years, it would go to executors, which would be injurious to the public (x); for the same reason it was held, that the office of remembrancer of the Exchequer, and other offices in the several courts of justice, could not be granted for years (x); such offices, however, as do not concern the administration of justice, but only require skill and diligence, may be granted for years, because they may be executed by deputy without inconvenience, therefore, the office of garbler of the spices (when it existed) was adjudged to be a good grant or appointment for years, within the intent of 1 J. 1, c. 19 (y); so, a grant for years of the office of registrar of policies of assurance in London was adjudged to be good (z); so, grants for years of other offices concerning trade had in early cases been adjudged to be good (a);

If an office be granted durante bene placito, it shall not be determined at the will of the party, but only at the will of the queen, and, therefore, the party may surrender, and if forfeited, it shall be found by inquisition, and till a surrender or forfeiture he continues officer (e).

553. A judicial office cannot be granted in reversion, for though the grantee be ever so fit a person at the time of the grant, he may become unfit when it takes effect (f); and such grant of a stewardship in remainder or reversion, or after death, was held void in Stanton and Green's case (g); and so it was adjudged in *Scambler v. Grantable to all persons generally.

§ 554. The grant of an office generally may be made to any person whom the queen pleases, for the queen has an interest in her subject, and a right to his services (n); and a charter exempting persons from serving offices within the cinque ports, would not exempt them from serving the office of sheriff (o), and formerly no person was excused for his neglect to qualify himself (p); but the Indemnity Act which passes annually, to indemnify persons who have omitted to comply with the requisitions of the 13 C. 2, st. 2, c. 1, and 25 C. 2, c. 2, and other acts, (see Dig. P. 1 tit OATHS), has modified the statutory provisions on that subject.

Persons must be able to execute the office.

555. None can legally hold an office, but one who is of ability to execute it. If, therefore, an office which concerns the administration of justice, the queen's revenue, or the public good, be granted by the queen or a subject to one who is inexpert and incapable of executing it, the grant will be absolutely void, and the grantee be disabled by law

556. Upon this principle persons under disabilities, as infants and women, can hold only certain offices; a ministerial office may be granted to an infant exercend' per se vel deputatum suum (r), as the office of register of a bishop (s); and it is said, so the grant of the office in reversion after the death of tenant for life, to an infant of the age of eleven years, exercendum per se vel deputatum suum, (as the usual grants are), is good, notwithstanding the infancy, Young v. Fowler (t); and in that case, all the justices held that it was good, notwithstanding the case cited in Co. Lit. 3, and there said to be resolved (u), that the grant of an under-stewardship in possession or reversion to an infant is void, because he is incapable thereof, not having knowledge to execute it pro commodo regis. But this case was denied, unless it be with this difference, where it is granted with such a clause to exercise it per se vel deputatum, and when he is of such tender age, that he cannot by intentment execute it by himself, as being an infant of three or four years of age, who hath not discretion to execute it; but when there is a clause to execute it by deputy, it is good, for he may appoint a sufficient deputy, and if he do not elect such, it is a forfeiture (x). 3. Execution of Offices by Deputy, or otherwise.

563. As to this point, there are some offices which in their nature and constitution imply a right of exercising them by deputy; some which in their nature cannot be so exercised, and others which may be so exercised if the power be annexed to the grant, otherwise they cannot be so exercised.

What offices may be exer-

Of the first description are offices of inheritance, as the office of Earl Marshal of England, forester, park-keeper, &c., which may be exercised by deputy (g); so, also, the office of high constable of England (h); so, he who holds in fee by personal service may make a deputy, for the estate may descend to a woman, infant, &c., who may be incapable of doing it in person (i); and if parceners cannot agree in nominating a deputy, Chancery will direct them to draw lots who shall nominate first (k).

Offices in fee.

564. Where nothing is required in an officer but superintendency, he may make a deputy (l), and, therefore, a constable may make a deputy (m); so, every ministerial officer may make a deputy, as a chamberlain or alderman (n), unless where the office is granted to be executed by him in person,

So, a sheriff though made by the queen's letters patent may make a deputy (r); so, a bishop on his creation has the power of appointing deputies (s); and the office of clerk of the outlawries of the C. said, that this is so essentially incident to a deputy, that a man cannot be a deputy to do any single act, nor can he be restrained by covenant to some particulars of his office, as, if the under-sheriff covenant, that he will not execute any process for more than £20 without special warrant from the high sheriff, this is void, because the under-sheriff is his deputy, and the power of the deputy cannot be restrained to be less than that of his principal (g). But regularly a deputy cannot make a deputy, for that imports an assignment of all his authority, which is not assignable (g); but a deputy may depute another to do a particular act, as if A. be appointed steward of a copyhold court, to be exercised by himself or deputy, and he appoint B. his deputy, who authorizes D. and C. to take a surrender of a copyhold tenement, the surrender will be good, being only a single act (g). A deputy, however, ought to act regularly in the name of his principal, as an under-sheriff does all in the name of the sheriff (g), and all his acts are in right of his principal and as his servant (h); but an act by a deputy in his own name will be good, except in special cases (i).

567. As an office is a thing which lies in grant, regularly an officer cannot be appointed without deed, so neither can there, according to the better opinion, be a deputation without deed (i); although it has been said that the deputation of an office is in its own nature grantable by parol, and, therefore, though it should happen to be granted in writing, yet since it is in itself grantable by parol, it may be revoked by parol (k).

No deputation

568. By the 2 H. 6, c. 10, it is provided, that all officers who are by their letters patent to appoint clerks and ministers, shall be charged to appoint such for whom they will answer at their peril, and regularly, all officers shall answer for their deputies (n); so, the franchise of a lord shall answer for a bailiff put in by him (o); and upon the rule of respondeat superior, regularly, all officers shall answer of their deputies, in the same manner as if the acts were done by themselves (p), unless it be in criminal cases, therefore, sheriffs shall answer for the escapes, amerciements, &c. of their deputies (p); so, where the warden of the Fleet in fee granted the office for life to A., who suffered escapes, he, and not A., was held liable (q); so, where a person was appointed collector of the customs in a certain port, who was empowered by the 1 El. c. 12, to appoint a deputy, and a deputy so appointed by him concealed the goods of a merchant, and the customer being ignorant thereof, returned on oath into the Exchequer the customs of this port, according to the information of his deputy, it was held, that he should, notwithstanding his ignorance, answer for the act of his deputy (r); but if a clerk in an office mis-enter anything, it was held, that he himself should be punished, and not the master of the office, because he took a fee for it (s).

Exception as to

569. Generally, an act of the deputy, without the assent of his superior, will not be a forfeiture of the office, as the act of an under-sheriff or under-bailiff is not a forfeiture of the office of the sheriff or bailiff in fee (t); but it seems from other cases that if a deputy suffers escapes, it is a forfeiture by the principal, unless such deputation be made for life, and then the grantee for life only forfeits the office (u), see further Dig. Many offices in fee may be settled and confirmed to the heirs of the body of the grantee, as the office of the Earl Marshal of England (z); so, there may be an estate tail of the office of steward, receiver, or bailiff of a manor, because it is exercisable within lands (a); so, of the chamberlainship of the Exchequer (b); so, it may be granted by a man to be regranted to himself and the heirs male of his body (b); or there may be a covenant to stand seised of it to the use of another (c); but it has been held, that the great chamberlainship of England, being inherent in the blood of the first grantee, was incapable of alienation, and could not therefore be entailed (d).

Estate for life in an office.

571. At common law all offices of justice were grantable for life, (see ante, § 548), but it is said, that when the queen grants an office at will, though she should grant to the patentee a rent for his life for the exercise of the same, yet this was no absolute estate for life, because the rent being granted on account of the office, and in discharge of the duties of the place, whenever his interest in the office ceased, the rent would determine also, being originally granted for the exercise of the office in which he ceased to be concerned (e).

An office granted for life may be granted with remainder over to another for life (f). So, the lord of a manor may by deed grant the stewardship of the manor of the courts thereto belonging, for the life of the grantee, so as to bind the future owners of the manor (g).

Curtesy in an office.

572. Curtesy and dower are both incident to offices of inheritance. From an early case cited by Lord Coke, it appears that John Duke of Lancaster claimed to exercise the office of seneschal of England, at the coronation of Richard 2, as tenant by curtesy, which claim was allowed; and a similar claim was made at the same coronation by John Dymock, to the office of King's champion, which was in like manner allowed (h).

Dower in an office.

573. So, a woman may be endowed of an office of inheritance, as of the office of the marshalsea, to have the third part of the profits, and in such case she shall be contributory to a third part of the charge; so, she may be endowed *de tertiâ parte exituum provenient, de custodiâ gaolæ Abbath. 574. In Bellamy v. Burrow (k), it was held, that a trust might be created of an office, and that an office might be granted to one in trust for another, but subsequent decisions have made this doctrine very questionable; thus, in Law v. Law (l), where A., by his interest with the commissioners of excise, got an office in that branch of the revenue for B., who in consideration thereof gave a bond to A. to pay him £10 per annum as long as B. enjoyed the place, equity would relieve against the bond; so, in Parsons v. Thompson (m) and Garforth v. Fearn (n), it was held, that if an action for money had and received were brought upon the footing of an agreement to allow a certain proportion of the profits of the office, in consideration of his having procured or been aiding to the defendant's appointment to it, the plaintiff could not recover; in the latter of these cases it is said, "The appointment of any customer contrary to the 12 R. 2, c. 2, is a misdemeanour. That statute, though very ancient, is certainly not obsolete, it is the statute under which they are sworn in the Exchequer. It not only prohibits the appointment, but goes on to say, that 'none that pursueth by him or by others, privily or openly, to be in any manner of office, shall be put in the same office or in any other,' and the 5 & 6 Ed. 6, c. 16, makes void all promises, bonds, and assurances, as well on the part of the bargainer as the bargainee (o);" so, where A. and B., part owners of a ship, and also husbands or managing owners, sold a part of their interest to C., and the deed contained a covenant that C. should be appointed to the command of the ship, and that A. and B. should continue husbands, it was held, that though the covenant to continue C.'s agents in the concern of the ship might be lawful if it stood alone, yet the deed being founded on a contract for the sale of the shares, with a stipulation for the appointment to the command, and the continuance of the management, it was illegal and void, in-

§ 576. To every grant of an office is annexed a condition in law, that the officer shall do that which to the office belongs, and for breach of the condition the office is forfeited (r). An office may be forfeited three ways, namely, by abuser, by non-user, and by refuser.

Forfeiture of

Wherever an officer acts contrary to the nature and duty of his office, the same is forfeited (s); as if a gaoler suffers voluntary escapes (t), or is guilty of extortion (u); so, if a sheriff suffer a felon to escape, whether voluntarily or negligently, it is a forfeiture, though the office be for life or in

So, it is to be understood, that if any keeper kill any deer without warrant, and convert them to his own use, or cut any trees or underwood, it is a forfeiture of his office (a).

577. With respect to non-user of an office, a distinction is to be taken where the office concerns the administration of justice or the commonwealth, and when it concerns a private individual (b). In the first case, the officer ex officio, or of necessity, ought to attend without demand or request; in this case, therefore, by non-user or non-attendance, the office is forfeited, as the office of chamberlain, the Exchequer prothonotary, clerks of the warrants, &c. in the Common Pleas, for the attendance of these officers is of necessity for the administration of justice, and the attendance of the clerk of the market is of necessity for the commonwealth.

Forfeiture by non-user.

578. So, non-attendance is a good cause of forfeiture of the office of recorder, his office being a public office relating to the administration of justice (c). But, when the officer ought not to attend and exercise his office but upon demand or request of him to whom he is officer, there non-attendance is no cause of forfeiture without demand or request made, as where the office of steward is granted to one to hold courts when he shall be required, it is implied in the grant that he is not bound to hold courts but upon request, and non-attendance without request made is no cause of forfeiture (d); so, if a man grants an annuity pro consilio impendendo, he is not bound to give counsel, but upon request made (e). But bare non-attendance will not be a cause of forfeiture; therefore, where the king gave a licence to a serjeant-at-arms for not attending the Chancellor, it was no forfeiture, though the licence was only by parol (f); so, if an officer be imprisoned for a misdemeanour in his office, non-attendance during his imprisonment is no forfeiture (g), particularly if the non-attendance arise from sickness or other inevitable accident (h).

In respect of private matters.

579. When the office relates to any man's private concerns, and the officer ought ex officio to attend his office without request, there the non-user or non-attendance is no cause of forfeiture unless the non-user or non-attendance is cause of prejudice or damage to him whose officer he is, in something which concerns his charge, as if a parker does not attend one or two days, and within those days no prejudice or damage happens, it is no forfeiture, but if by reason of his absence persons unknown kill any deer, it is a forfeiture of his office, and therewith agrees 5 E. 4. 6, cited Earl of Shrewsbury's case (i).

581. As to refusal, in all cases where an officer is bound upon request to exercise an office, if he neglects to do it upon such request, he forfeits it, as if the steward of a manor is requested by the lord to hold a court, which he doth not, it is a forfeiture (p); so, as a recorder is bound to attend and assist at the sessions, to direct a corporation in the proceedings of justice, his non-attendance was held to be a cause of forfeiture (q); but it must be a general refusal or neglect to attend, to occasion such a forfeiture (r).

Before the abolition of assizes, (by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, see Dig. P. III. tit. Where an action lies, and in what courts.

DIGNITIES.

§ 598. Dignities appendant to Land.

Dignities ap-pendant to land.

§ 598. Dignities are another species of incorporeal hereditaments, which being originally annexed to land, are reckoned as real property; for the possessors of such dignities were in right of those estates allowed to be peers of the realm, and upon the alienation of the same passed as appendant (l). This subject may be considered under the following heads:—

1. How distinguished.
 2. How claimed or created.
 3. What estates may be had in a dignity.
 4. How lost or recovered.

I. How distinguished.

§ 599. Degrees of Nobility.

Degrees of nobility.

§ 599. Persons of dignity are either noble or under the degree of nobility, or they are distinguished into superior and inferior nobility. The superior nobility are distinguished by the titles of duke, marquis, earl, viscount, and baron. The inferior nobility are baronets, knights, esquires, and gentlemen (m).

Nobility gives so high a dignity to the person possessing it as to supply both his Christian and surname in all legal instruments; and in legal process, the omission of a name of dignity may even be pleaded in abatement, and where a peer has more than one name of dignity, he must be named by the most noble (n); but no temporal dignity of any foreign nation can give a right to a higher title in this country than that of esquire (o). Therefore, a duke, earl, &c., of another kingdom, are not to be sued by those names here, for that they are not peers of Parliament. But by the Act of Union with Scotland, 5 A. c. 8, art. 4, it is declared that all peers of Scotland shall be peers of Great Britain, and rank next after those of the same degree at the time of the Union, and shall have all the privileges of peers except sitting in the House of Lords, and voting at the trial of a peer; and the Act of Union with Ireland, 39 & 40 Gt. 3, c. 67, art. 4, provides that the peers of Ireland shall, as peers of the United Kingdom, enjoy all privileges of peers, except sitting in the House of Lords and at the trial of a peer, and that the peers of Ireland at the time of the Union shall have precedency next after the peers of the same degree in Great Britain, and all peerages of Ireland and of the United Kingdom subsequently created are to rank according to the dates of their creation. As to the precedence of foreign dukes, earls, &c., it is said that it differs not, though they have not voice in Parliament (p).

and the estates and dignities attached to the castle of Arundel are now vested in the family of the Duke of Norfolk. In the late case of the Berkeley peerage this claim was rejected (s).

Creation by writ.

601. So, a man may be created by writ, as if the queen by writ of summons requires any to come to Parliament, and upon that he sits in the House of Peers, he is then baron (t), and this was the ancient way of creation (t); but he is not a baron if he die before the return of the writ (u), or if he never sit in Parliament by force of the writ (u).

Naming a place in the creation.

It was formerly held, that as dignities were annexed to land, the naming of some place was necessary in the creation of a dignity, but it has since been decided that it is not necessary, and in R. v. Knollys (x), it is said that the naming a place is not essential in the creation of a dignity, and the earldom of Rivers is cited as an instance where no place is named. So, in Lord Purbeck's case (y), a distinction was taken between ancient honours as being feodary and officary, and having relation to a place, and modern dignities, as being titular and personal, notwithstanding the formality of naming a place in the creation.

So, in the opinion of some, he must be invested according to the usual form of investiture, in order to make the dignity hereditary (z).

So, the eldest sons of peers may be called, by writ of summons, by the name of title of a barony vested in their fathers, because in that case there is no danger of his children's losing their nobility in case he never takes his seat, for they will succeed to their grandfather; and where the father's barony is limited to him and the heirs male of his body, and his eldest son is called up to the House of Lords

602. So, a man may be created duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron, or baronet, by letters patent (b); and the first case of such a creation was 10th Oct. 11 R. 2; so, the queen may create an Irish peer under the Great Seal of England, but this must be by express words, being a special act of prerogative, for properly what is done under the Great Seal of England relates to England (e); but, if the queen, by letters of safe conduct, denization, &c. to a noble foreigner, names him by his title, this does not make him a peer of the realm or noble here (d). Although a man, who is created a baron by writ, must sit in Parliament in order to be noble, yet the case of nobility by letters patent is different, for by them the creation is perfect, and the blood is ennobled without sitting; and therefore, in Lord Banbury's case (e), held, that a peerage claimed under letters patent is not triable by record of Parliament.

patent.

603. So, a man may be made noble by Act of Parliament (g); but, if a noble foreigner be naturalized by Parliament, this will not make him noble here (h); so, if a duke, baron, &c. of Scotland, (before the Union), or another kingdom, had a son and heir born in England, by which he is natural born, he will not be noble here (d).

By Act of Parliament.

If, however, she marries a peer, though her husband be of a lower peerage than herself, yet, according to the letter, she will retain her own dignity; as, if being a duchess by marriage she marries a baron, yet she continues a duchess (m); though, in this case, it is said, she shall have precedency only according to the rank of her husband (n); but it is said, in some of the books, that if a woman noble by birth marry one of inferior nobility, she shall be styled by the dignity of her second husband (o). If a queen dowager takes a husband, noble or not noble, she shall not, by her subsequent marriage, lose her dignity (p); so, though a woman who is noble in her own right will continue so notwithstanding her marriage with a commoner, yet her dignity communicates no rank or title to her husband (q), see further infra, § 605.

§ 605. A man (says Lord Coke) may have an inheritance in a title of nobility and dignity three manner of ways: by creation, by descent, and by prescription (r). While dignities were annexed to lands, the person seised of the lands had the same estate in the dignity; so, dignities created as well by patent as by writ, have many of the incidents of real property (r).

Different ways of having an inheritance in a dignity.

Dignities created by writ descend to females as well as to males (s); but, though they are said to be in fee (t), yet it is not strictly so, for a person having a dignity of this kind is not tenant in fee simple of it, so that it should descend to the heirs general, lineal, or collateral of the person last seised; on the contrary, a dignity of this kind is only inheritable by such of his heirs as are lineally descended from the person first summoned to Parliament, and not to any other of his heirs (u).

606. Creation by writ is said to have one advantage over that by patent, that a person, created by writ, holds the dignity to him and his heirs, for the word "heirs" is not necessary to a creation of nobility by writ, for when a man is called to the upper House of Parliament by writ, he is a baron, and hath inheritance therein without this word; yet the queen may, by the writ, limit the general state of inheritance created by the law and custom of the realm (x); but, if he be created by writ, there must necessarily be the word "heirs," otherwise he has no inheritance (x).

Limitations of dignities.

607. If a dignity be created by letters patent, the state of inheritance must be limited by apt words, otherwise the grant is void (y).

Entailable.

A name of dignity may be entailed within the Statute de Donis, as dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, barons, because they were originally named of some county, manor, town, or place, (see ante, § 600), and consequently concerned land (z); thus it was resolved, that when Ralph Nevil was by letters created Earl of Westmoreland to him and the heirs male of his body, an estate tail was thereby raised, and not a fee conditional at common law (a); so, a dignity may not only be entailed at its first creation, but also a dignity, originally descendible to heirs general, may be entailed by an Act of Parliament upon the heirs male of the person seised thereof (b), therefore, in a dispute, after the death of Henry de Vere Earl of Oxford, respecting the right to that earldom, between Robert de Vere, claiming under the entail, created by the 16 R. 2, as heir male of the body of Aubrey de Vere, and Lord Willoughby de Eresby, claiming as heir general, the judges, whose assistance was called in by the House of Lords, that is, the Lord Chief Justice Crew, Lord Chief Baron Walter, Doddridge and Yelverton, Justices, and Baron Trevor, were unanimously of opinion, "that, although the earldom of Oxford was originally held in fee simple by the family of De Vere, yet that the honour of the said earldom of Oxford was entailed upon Aubrey de Vere and his heirs male by the Parliament of 16 R. 2, and that an estate therein was sufficiently raised and created thereby, and was so reputed and enjoyed by many descents of the earls, which could not have been (as the same was limited) if the same had only been an ordinance of Parliament; that, therefore, the said honour descended, and then of right belonged to Robert de Vere as heir male of the said Aubrey, by virtue of the entail (c)."

608. It was resolved, Pasch. 9 Jac. 1, if the king did not create a man of some place, he should not have an estate tail, but a fee simple conditional, which should be forfeited for felony, but if he created him a baronet of some place, then he should have an estate tail within the Statute de Donis (d). But, though dignities and titles are thus entailed as tenements within the statute, yet neither the donee nor his issue could bar the entail, by fine or recovery, before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 74, (see Dig. P. II. tit. FINES AND RECOVERIES), nor by any other means, as might or may now be done under that Act in the case of other entailable things (e).

When not entailable.

Entail not bar-rable.

609. An estate in a dignity may also be limited to a person in remainder, after the determination of an estate tail; thus the earldom of Northumberland was granted to Thomas Percy and the heirs male of his body, and for default of such issue, to Henry his brother, and the heirs male of his body (f).

Estate in remainder;

610. So, the queen may create either man or woman noble for life (g), but not, it is said, for years, because then it might go to executors and administrators (h).

noble during the life of another (i); and Mr. Justice Dodderidge, in his Treatise on Dignities, observes, that the king may grant peerages pur autre vie, "as (however, he adds by way of qualification) it has been said." In a late case (k) it is observed, "that the Crown may grant a peerage for life, not only of the grantee, but also pur autre vie. The most common way of doing this is by a grant to the son during the life of the father, by calling the son by another title to this house, such a title will enure during the father's life, and on his death the succession will operate by way of merger, so that the two will become but one dignity. (See ante, § 601). "But although this is the common and usual way, it is not the only way in which such a title may be granted. The cestui que vie may be the ancestor or not, and then observe, my lords, what is the consequence of this singular reservation; a man does not know in one day whether he shall be noble or commoner the next (l);" so in the same case it was said, "Is the blood of a man to be ennobled only for a time? I say no, for being once ennobled, it must be so till crime has worked a forfeiture of his nobility (m)."

Not subject to curtesy.

611. It seems also doubtful, whether a dignity is subject to curtesy. While dignities were annexed to castles, manors, &c., the husband of a woman possessed of such castles, &c., was bound, among other services due to the Crown, to attend in Parliament, and, consequently, enjoyed the dignity during the joint lives of himself and his wife, of which some early examples are cited by Mr. Cruise, 3 Dig. 150, 4th ed.; but in the time of Lord Coke this point was much discussed, and by him is left doubtful (n); but the better opinion in modern times is that there is no curtesy in titles of honour (o).

Not to dower.

613. Dignities by tenure appear to have been formerly alienable, provided such alienation was made with the consent of the Crown (r); but when dignities ceased to be annexed to the possessions of land, and came to be considered as personal inheritances, the right of alienation ceased, and it became a settled rule that a dignity was an hereditament, inherent in the blood of the first grantee, and his descendants, and was therefore unalienable (s); therefore, in the case of an entail they cannot be barred (t).

Not alienable.

So, not surrendered to the Crown (u); so, it seems to be now settled, that it will not be extinguished by the acceptance of a new title, "for the greater dignity doth never drown the lesser dignity, but both stand together in one person, and therefore, if a knight be created a baron, yet he remaineth a knight still; and if the baron be created an earl, yet the dignity of a baron remains, et sic de cæteris (u);" although this point was doubted in Lord Delawarre's case (x), yet it was settled in the case of the barony of Willoughby de Broke (y); so, where a person having a barony by writ is made an earl, held, contrary to a former supposition, that the earldom will not attract the barony, but at his death, leaving a daughter only and a younger brother, the barony would descend to the daughter, and the earldom to the younger brother (z); so, if the earldom becomes extinct, the barony will descend to the heir (a).

Descent of dignities.

614. The descent of dignities by tenure was guided by the same rules as regulated the descent of the castles and manors, &c., to which they were annexed, as to which see post, TITLE TO THINGS REAL.

No possessio fratris.

The descent of dignities created by writ differs from the descent of lands, inasmuch as there can be no other possession had thereof but such as descends (as to be a duke, marquis, earl, viscount, or baron) to a man and his heirs; therefore, before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, (abolishing this distinction), there could be no possessio fratris of a dignity to make the sister inherit, but the younger brother being heir to his father should inherit the dignity, inherent to the blood, as heir to him that was first created noble (b).

Elders sons created barons.

615. Where baronies are created by writ of summons to the eldest sons of peers, by the name of baronies vested in their fathers, (see ante, § 601), they are held to be hereditary in the blood of the persons so summoned, and descendible to their heirs; therefore, if the son dies in the lifetime of his father, the dignity will descend to his son (c); but if the father has only an estate tail in the barony, the estate of the son, though summoned by writ, is not enlarged, nor made a fee, descendible to heirs in general; therefore, where the eldest son was summoned by writ in the name of a barony not vested in his father, it has been determined that his son could not establish his claim to be summoned by writ (c).

Dignities not partible.

ance (d). This abeyance may be determined two ways: first, by the Crown, the fountain of honour and dignity, conferring it on whom the sovereign pleases; secondly, by the death of all the coheirs but one. A remarkable instance of the exercise of the prerogative in reviving titles after an abeyance, took place in the person of Mr. Norborn Berkley, who was called to the House of Peers in right of the old barony of Botetourt, after an abeyance of several centuries, and was allowed to sit according to the antiquity of that barony (e); and it has been decided that the queen may dispose of the dignity to either one of the coheirs at her pleasure, but not to a stranger (f); so, it has been held, that it is in her Majesty's power to suspend the dignity, but not to extinguish the same (g). As to the second case, where there is but one co-heir, it has been decided that the attainder of one of the coheirs for high treason did not terminate the abeyance, and give the other a right to the barony (g).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

617. When the abeyance of a barony is terminated in favour of a commoner, a writ of summons is directed to be issued to him by the style and title of the barony which is in abeyance; but where the person in whose favour an abeyance is determined is already a peer, and has a higher dignity, then the barony is confirmed to him by letters patent, and in the case of a female, the abeyance is also terminated by letters patent (h).

Modes of determining an abeyance.

Formerly it was the practice to confirm the barony to the coheirs and his or her heirs, but now it is more properly confirmed to the heirs of his or her body, for no one can be heir of the body of the person in whose favour the abeyance is determined, without being also lineally descended from the person first summoned (h).

Forfeited by attainder.

§ 618. A peer cannot be degraded but by attainder or by Act of Parliament; a peerage may, however, be lost for want of heirs, but a peer cannot divest himself of his honour (i).

Attainder for felony.

Dignities of every kind are forfeited by attainder for treason, and can be revived only by a reversal of the attainder; but where a person was tenant in tail of a dignity, remainder in tail to another, and the first tenant in tail was attainted of high treason, the dignity was held forfeited as to him and his descendants, but not as to him in remainder (k); so, a dignity created by writ, and descendible to heirs in general, is also forfeited by attainder for felony of the person possessed of it, for, in the words of Lord Coke, "If he was noble or gentle before, he, and all his posterity, are by the attainder made ignoble (l); but dignities in tail are not forfeited by attainder for felony, except during the life of the person attainted, for the 26 H. 8, c. 13, which subjects estates tail to forfeiture for high treason, does not extend to attainders for felony, as in the case of Lord Stourton (m), and again in Earl Ferrers' case (n).

Corruption of blood.

619. The blood of a person attainted being corrupted, no pedigree can be derived through him (o); therefore, where a dignity descends to heirs general, the attainder for treason or felony of any ancestor of a person claiming such dignity, though the person attainted was never possessed of the dignity, will bar his claim, for the blood of the person being corrupted, no pedigree can be derived through him (p); and so decided in the case of the Barony of Lumley (q); but this does not extend to entailed dignities, therefore, a dignity may be claimed by a son surviving an attainted father, who never possessed the dignity (r); for the son may claim from the first grantee per formam doni (s), and so it has since been decided (t); but where the person attainted survives the ancestor who possessed the dignity, it has been decided that the dignity reverted to the Crown, and could not be claimed by any collateral relative of the person (u).

620. As every one of the nobility is presumed in law to have sufficient freehold ad sustinendum nomen et onus, if one that is noble want possessions to maintain his estate, it has been held reason sufficient to degrade him, as in the case of George Nevill, Duke of Bedford, who was degraded by Act of Parliament (x); but a dignity can be taken away by Act of Parliament only (y), it cannot be taken away by order of the lords in Parliament (z); so, a dignity or nobility cannot be extinguished except by Act of Parliament, if it be not forfeited (a), or unless lost by marriage, as in the case of a woman, see ante, § 604.

Honour taken away for poverty.

So, a dignity will not be extinguished by acceptance of another dignity, (see ante, § 613); so, a dignity shall not be lost, as in the case of lands, by non-claim, by the 3 & 4 W.

Restoration of blood.

621. In case of attainder for treason or felony, the corruption of blood can be restored by Parliament only. Restitution may be either as to the corruption of blood only, or it may be a general restitution not only to blood, but also to lands and honours (d). When a person is outlawed for treason or felony the blood is also corrupted, but may be restored either by Act of Parliament, reversal of the outlawry, or writ of error. Formerly, a writ of error to reverse an outlawry in a criminal matter was held to be merely ex gratiâ regis, and not grantable ex debito justitiæ (e); afterwards it was held to be grantable as matter of right in all cases under treason and felony (f), but now it cannot issue without a flat from the Attorney-General (g).

Disputed claims, how tried.

By record.

622. If there be a dispute whether a man be a peer or no, it shall be tried by record of Parliament (h), for generally all matters of record shall be tried by the record itself (i); but this applies properly to baronies by writ, and where the baron has taken his seat, (see ante, § 601), for unless he has taken his seat it cannot appear by the record (j); but it is different with baronies by patent, for by them the creation is perfect and the blood is ennobled without sitting; therefore, it has been held, that a peerage claimed under letters-patent is not triable by the record of Parliament, but must be questioned by pleading non concessit (k); and where a man claims by descent, though he ought to produce the patent of creation, yet being a matter of fact

What is a forest.

§ 624. A forest is a circuit of ground properly under the queen's protection, for the peaceable living and abiding of beasts of venery and chace, and distinguished not only by having bounds and privileges, but also by having courts and officers (o); but it is not proved to be a forest by being called a forest in records, &c. (o) A forest may be in the hands of a subject, for it may be granted by the sovereign, subject to the forest laws, as it was in the case of the Dukes of Norfolk and Lancaster, who had forests so subject to the forest laws (p); but if the jurisdiction be not added in the grant, it becomes only a chace, and trespassers were punishable formerly at common law (q), but now under the provisions of the 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 32, see Dig. P. III. tit. GAME. If a forest be parcel of a manor, by the grant of the manor cum pertinentiis to a subject, the forest does not pass (r).

What is the purlieu of the forest.

625. In the time of H. 2, R. 1, and John, many lands adjoining to the king's forests were incroached within the forest, which by Charta de Foresta, made 17 John, and confirmed 9 H. 3, were to be disafforested, and afterwards by perambulations made in the time of Ed. 1 and Ed. 3, were disafforested, and the lands so disafforested are named the purlieu or pourallée, that is, the part perambulated (s). What wood esteemed vert.

627. All wood and underwood in the forest is esteemed vert, and if any cut the vert of the forest within his own land without licence, it is waste (k); therefore, a man cannot cut wood in his own land within the forest, or destroy the coverts, without a view of the forester, and licence of the justices in Eyre, (now by 10 G. 4, c. 50, the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests), though it escheated to the queen, and he then held it by the queen's patent, for the patentee shall be subject to the forest laws (l); but, in a forest and chace in the hands of a common person, the owner of the soil may cut his wood without the licence or view of the forester, if sufficient vert be left (m); so, by prescription, a man may cut timber in his own wood within the forest without the view of the forester (n), so far at least as regards a forest, though allowed in respect of a chace; so, an officer, as it seems, may prescribe to have so much wood to be assigned by the woodward within the forest for his fuel (o).

Who may cut

If the cutting of vert or covert within a forest be waste, the destruction of it will be still more so; and therefore, if a man cut his wood by licence within the forest, and afterwards do not inclose the wood with a sufficient fence, whereby it be destroyed by beasts, the destruction of the wood will be waste (p); so, if he assart, that is, eradicate, his woods, and convert his land to tillage, that will be more

The old forest law is in most other respects now grown out of use, and what remains of it is now administered by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests, aided by the verderers and some other of the old officers. By the 10 G. 4, c. 50, it is provided, that all honours, hundreds, lordships, manors, forests, chaces, woods, parks, messuages, lands, tithes, fisheries, franchises, services, rents, and other land revenues, possessions, tenements, and hereditaments, belonging to her Majesty, (except advowsons and vicarages), shall be under the management of her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods and Forests; so, by the Game Act, 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 32, provision is made for the punishment of persons trespassing in any of her Majesty's forests, parks, chases, or warrens. Free warren is also a privilege to have beasts of a warren in one's land, and the exclusive right of killing and hunting them therein (y). rights.

§ 631. A manor, as before shewn, (see ante, § 88), is a certain circuit or district originally assigned to great men, to which certain manorial rights or privileges were annexed. One of the most important rights belonging to this franchise is that of holding courts, namely, a court-baron and a customary court.

Court-baron.

To every manor a court-baron is incident (r), and therefore in a quo warranto for holding a court-baron, it is sufficient to plead that he has a manor (s); and if he pleads that he has a manor, he ought not to prescribe for holding a court-baron (t); so, if he grants a manor, the court-baron passes as incident, although there is an exception of all courts, unless in the case of the queen (u); but the profits of courts may be excepted (x); and being incident to a manor of common right, it is not lost, merely because no court has time out of mind been holden within the manor (y).

Suitors to the court.

Freehold tenants alone are suitors to the court-baron, and of these there must be two at least (z); and in Glover v. Lane (a), it is said, "To constitute a manor, it is necessary

The suitors are the judges of the court, not the steward (c), unless there be a custom or prescription that pleas should be holden before the steward, which it seems there may be (d); although in some earlier cases this was denied (e). The steward is, however, a constituent part of the court, and not merely a ministerial officer, as was formerly supposed (f).

632. Courts baron were ordained for three purposes, namely, to adjust differences between lord and lord, between lord and tenant, and between tenant and tenant (g); and it is said also as against strangers coming within the manor (h).

A court-baron, it seems, may also hold pleas of land, to the exclusion of all other jurisdictions, except by a remisit curiam from the lord (q); and this was by a writ of right patent before its abolition by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27. Such a plea may be removed by writ of toll into the county court, and from thence into the Court of Common Pleas (r).

A court by prescription may also have jurisdiction, as a peculiar, to grant probate and administration, and also to take cognizance of testamentary causes (s).

If an action be sued in a court-baron, in which it has no jurisdiction, prohibition lies (t); so, if the defendant pleads that the cause did not arise within the jurisdiction (t); so, if it has no jurisdiction, the proceeding there is void, and trespass lies (t).

A court-baron may be held at any place within the manor, otherwise it will be void (u); but by custom the lord may hold a court within one manor for several manors (v); so, a surrender may be made out of court without alleging a special custom for it (x); so, a steward may take surrenders out of a manor without a custom (y).

The court-baron was formerly held once in every three weeks (z), but it is now usually held once a year, and the lord, in the absence of any custom, cannot compel a more frequent attendance of the suitors (a); and it is said that it might be held even at night (b). But special courts may

The usual method of holding a court-baron is, that the steward makes a precept to give reasonable warning of the court (c). Warning for fifteen days is best, which is the common time between the teste and return of a writ in the Common Pleas (c), but six or seven days' warning is sufficient (c).

Method of holding courts.

After the inquest and the proclamation, the steward gives the charge to the inquest (d). The charge admonishes them to present suitors who make default (e); so, to present the death of every tenant, and who is heir, and what profit accrues to the lord by his death (f); forfeiture of any tenant by alienation, &c. (f); so, subtraction of services (f); so, incroachment or trespass in his demesne, or waste (f); so, inclosure or surcharge, &c. of common (f).

Charge to the inquest.

All pleas in a court-baron of common right and of a personal nature were by wager of law, before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 2, s. 13, abolishing that proceeding, and it was only by prescription that it could be determined by the jury (g).

634. The process on plaint in a court-baron is summons and distress infinite (h); but the court has no power to make execution as in the superior courts (i); and the distress in a court-baron, even of goods taken upon a judgment, is only in the nature of a pledge, and cannot be sold except by special custom (k); yet, by special custom, a levari facias may be awarded in a court-baron, and the goods may be sold, but in such case the custom must be pleaded (l).

A court-baron not being a court of record, neither the lord nor steward can fine or imprison (m), nor can the lord or steward assess an amercement for a private trespass done to the lord, except by custom (n); yet by prescription, the steward, even of a court-baron, may assess an amercement (o), see further as to amercements, post, § 652.

Customary
court.

635. So, a manor has a customary court, as well as a court-baron (p), and this concerns the copyhold tenants only (p), and it may be held without freeholders, although it is otherwise with a court-baron, (see ante, § 631), and although there should be no freeholder in the manor by which the court-baron could be held, and even the manor itself is, in some respects, lost, yet there still may be a customary court (q); so, therefore, where a manor is granted by copy, it may have a customary court, but it shall not have a court-baron (r); but there cannot be a customary court without copyholders (s), for this customary court is for those only by copy of court-roll, and the lord or steward is the judge in distinction from a court-baron at common law, where the suitors are the judges (t), see ante, §§ 631, 632; so, the copyholders attending to do their fealty at this court are called "the homage," who are sworn to make their presentments in the same manner as the jury at a leet, see post, § 648; and if a manor has a court of a double nature, that is, customary and court-baron, the proceedings of both may be entered on the same roll (u).

is not sufficient (r); so, there may be a superior leet belonging to a manor, which shall inquire of all matters which the inferior leet has neglected to present (s); and at this leet the reeve and four resiants ought to attend, but they cannot compel the attendance of an inhabitant who belonged to the particular leet, because a man cannot be of two leets (s). The jurisdiction of a leet jury, like that of a grand jury, is confined to things done or neglected since the last court; they cannot, therefore, present things done subsequently to their being sworn (t), and a custom for the jurors to be charged and sworn at one court to inquire and present, and to return their presentment at the next court, has been held bad (u); but it is said that in some manors the jury continue in office for a whole year (v).

A person is not liable to serve the office of constable unless he be resident in the parish, occupying a house paying rates and taxes; carrying on business there is not sufficient if he do not sleep there (x); but though a man is not bound to attend two leets, yet when a leet is held for a manor within a hundred, the tenant of the manor leet is not excused from serving the office of constable for the hundred, but a custom for the exemption might be good (y).

Exemptions from serving office.

650. A barrister, and a practising attorney, is, by reason of his attending the courts at Westminster, exempt from serving the office of constable, but this privilege does not extend to a physician (z); so, not to a person because he is Master of Arts (a); so, a certificate under 10 & 11 W. 3, discharging persons from serving parish offices, is no exemption from being sworn constable at a court-leet (b); whether a gentleman of quality may be exempt, is not settled (c). In Prouse's case (d), it was held, that a woman could not be a constable, but in Vane's case (e), a custom in a vill, where there are several houses, that every one shall be constable in turn, was held good; "For though it shall happen to be the turn of a widow, she may have one to serve, and then he who serves is sworn, and he is a constable and not a deputy;" see also *R. v. Fines.

651. A fine may be imposed by the steward upon any officer of the leet for neglect of his duty, as if a bailiff refuse to make return of the panel (h), or a juror to be sworn (i); so, for a contempt in view of the court, as putting on his hat in court (h), or saying to the steward "You lie (l);" sed secus as to words not importing contempt (m); but the fine must be reasonable (n); and therefore, if a fine in a court-leet be unreasonable, it may be avoided by plea and judgment of the court, for the judges are to determine the reasonableness of a fine (n).

If an amercement be affeered, the lord may distrain for it of common right, without prescription (h), and the distress may be taken in any place within the precinct of the leet (i), even in the common street (k); but a distress cannot be taken for an amercement in a place out of the jurisdiction, and therefore it is necessary to plead the bounds of the leet with certainty (l); so, it may not be upon the goods of a stranger (m), though they be upon the land of the offender (n); so, the bailiff cannot distrain ex officio, but he must have a special warrant from the steward (n); and if a bailiff justifies in trespass, he ought to shew the precept (o); but in replevin this is not necessary (o).

So, debt lies for an amercement affeered (p), and debt on an amercement may be joined with debt on a mutuatur (q); so, in debt for an amercement of a freeholder, it must be proved to have been affeered by freeholders, otherwise the action will not lie (r); so, if the names of the affeersors be not set forth in the declaration, it shall be intended that it has been done by the steward (s).

Recovery of Wreck.

§ 656. Wreck is where goods, after shipwreck, are thrown upon the land, and no man, dog, or other animal escapes alive out of the ship (t); but if any animal escapes alive, it will not be wreck, for a dog and cat are put but for examples (u), and the statute Westm. 1, c. 4, (3 Ed. 1), is deemed to be only a declaration of the common law (x). What is wreck.

So, if a ship being in distress, all desert her, and any one come alive to land, though the ship afterwards perishes, there will be no wreck (y); so, if a ship, being in a tempest, cut its cable, the anchor is not wreck (z); so, where a ship at sea was pursued by enemies, and the men for the safeguard of their lives left the ship, and the enemy took the ship and spoiled her of her goods and tackle and turned her into sea, and she was driven ashore by the weather, where the men arrived, it was resolved by all the judges of England that the ship was no wreck nor lost (a). In order, therefore, to constitute wreck, not only must there be no life saved, or vestige remaining by which the property may be identified, but the goods must be cast or left on the land by the sea (b), and this is the legal signification of the word "wreck" (c); and the jurisdiction over such property belongs, therefore, not to the admiral, but to the common law (d); therefore, if the ship perish, and any of the servants escape, held, that the goods are not wreck (e).

657. To wreck also belongs what has been technically called flotsam, jetsam, and lagan.

Flotsam. Flotsam is where goods after shipwreck be floating or swimming upon the top of the water (f).

Jetsam. Jetsam is anything cast out of the ship being in danger of a wreck, and beaten to the shore by the waves, or cast on it by the mariners (f).

Lagan. Lagan is where the goods are so cast into the sea, and the ship afterwards perishes, and the goods are so ponderous that they sink to the bottom, but the mariners, with intent to get them, fasten to them a buoy or cork, or other such thing as will not sink, so that by such things they may find them again (f). And none of those goods which are called flotsam, jetsam, or lagan are called wreck so long as they remain in or upon the sea; but if any of them are driven to the land by the sea, then they shall be said to be wreck; so that flotsam, jetsam, and lagan pass by the grant of wreck (f); but this is only when the ship perishes, or the owner of the goods is not known, for goods cast into the sea for fear of tempest are not forfeited (g), and so long as goods flotsam, &c., are upon the sea, they do not pass to the queen, but to the first finder (h).

to wreck.

658. By the common law all wrecks belong to the queen (h), for by her prerogative she has dominion over the sea, and is entitled to all derelict goods of merchants; and she has a right of way over any man's ground for her wreck (i).

must be kept by view of the sheriff, coroner, &c., and bailed in the hands of those of the town where found; and if any person proves property within a year and a day, they shall be restored to him without delay, if not, they remain to the queen (k). If the goods are not kept by the sheriff, but taken away by the neighbours, the owner shall have a commission of oyer and terminer, to inquire of the trespass and make restitution (l). The year and day, within which the owner may prove his property, shall be computed from the seizure as wreck (l); and if the owner dies, his executor or administrator may prove his property (l); so, if the goods are bona peritura, the sheriff may for necessity (which is excepted out of law) sell them within the year (l).

goods to the owner.

But wreck of the queen's goods will not alter the property in them (m), and she is not confined to her proof within a year and day like a subject (n).

659. Wreck may, however, belong to a subject by grant or prescription, or even by mere usage, for it seems that in some cases usage will give a subject a right against the prerogative (o), and so in the case of wreck (p), for it is said that in ancient times wreck of the sea and other casualties belonged to the first finder, although afterwards the right was transferred to the king as the head of the republic (q).

Wreck as a franchise.

In cases of express grant, it is said, that rights or privileges within a certain precinct shall not be extended, although the precinct itself is afterward extended, and therefore, where wreck of the sea was granted to a man in all his lands, this grant should not extend to the land whereof he was then disseised, and into which he afterwards re-entered, because at the time of the grant he had only a right in the land, and the grant at the time of the making of it could not extend to the land which was then not his own, but another's, viz. the disseisor's (r); so, it has been held, that if any liberty was resumed by Act of Parliament which a corporation had, and the lands came to the king who granted over the land with tot talia, &c., as the corporation had, the resumed liberty would not pass, unless there were special words of grant de novo (s); sed secus where the liberty was appendant to a manor originally in the hands of an abbot (e); and a grant of Duchy lands is subject to the same incidents as a grant of lands belonging to the Crown (t).

Lord High Admiral's privilege as to wreck.

660. It seems that the Lord High Admiral may have wreck by prescription, "for the Lord High Admiral's office (u) is an ancient office:" but it cannot be claimed as appurtenant to his office; therefore, when a manor, to which wreck belonged by prescription, came to the king's hands, who granted to A. "the office of Admiral, with all wrecks at sea and all profits to the said office belonging," and after this granted the manor to B., under whom the plaintiff claimed, it was held that those words did not pass the wreck belonging to the manor by prescription (x).

Right com-
to manors.

661. This franchise is most usually annexed to manors, and may also be parcel of or belong to a hundred (y); and a right to wreck of the sea infra manerium is a strong presumption that the shores are parcel of the manor (z); so, one may prescribe to have wreck between high and low water mark, and it is said, that those of the west country prescribe to have wreck in the sea so far as they may see an Humber barrel (a); so, one may prescribe to have flotsam and jetsam, City of Bristol and Lord Berkeley (b), and in this case, where the Lord Berkeley had a manor adjoining to the Severn,

Although usage, as before observed, (see ante, § 659), may give a subject a right to wreck, yet, in that case, the custom must be founded upon some consideration, or it will be void; therefore, where the plea in trover was the custom that, if a ship perished, the lord should have the best anchor and cable, it was held bad, for that the custom was without consideration and void (d); but, in a similar action for taking an anchor and cable by virtue of a similar custom, where the defendant (the lord of the manor of Burling) shewed that the lord of that manor had been used, when any wreck happened upon the manor between high and low water mark, to take care of the sick and wounded, and to bury the dead, and to preserve the goods cast there, for the use of the proprietor, and in consideration thereof, to have the ship's best anchor and cable, this was held to be a good consideration, and the custom not unreasonable (e).

662. Goods which are considered wreck, by being cast upon the land, are called derelict, that is, deserted by the owners, and this happens upon many occasions, as, where they come from infected towns and places, and though never purposed for merchandize, they will be wreck when they come on shore (f); so, boats or other vessels forsaken, or found on the sea without any person in them, are also said to be derelict (g); so, again, goods never intended for merchandize, which are thrown overboard to lighten a ship in a storm, are wreck if cast on shore, although there be no subsequent shipwreck (h); but goods, as it seems, (though intended for traffic), which are cast overboard to lighten the ship, are not considered as derelict (i), sed quære; and a question also arose at that time, whether derelict goods were liable to customs' duty (j). This point was first raised in Saunders's case (j), and it seemed to be then considered, that as the king was not chargeable with customs, so his grantee, who was to enjoy the privilege in like manner with himself, ought not to be liable, and in Sheppard v. Gosnold (k), it was decided that wrecked goods were not liable, and this decision was confirmed in a subsequent case, Courtney v. Bower (l), although in a previous case, Power v. Portman (m), it was held, that goods wrecked or flotsam, should pay customs, and now, by Act of Parliament, derelict goods are made liable; see the Customs' Act, 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 56, Dig. P. 1. tit. FLOTSAM.

wreck.

663. Possession of the wreck is in him that has the right, and Fitzherbert lays it down, that if a man have wreck by prescription or grant, and goods be wrecked on his land, he may have an action of trespass against any one for taking them away (n).

Recovery of wreck.

When wreck is to be recovered, the jurisdiction is not in the admiral, but in the courts of common law (o), but the Court of Admiralty shall have cognizance of flotsam, jetsam, and lagan, because the latter are on the sea; therefore, in a case between the Lord High Admiral and Sir Henry Constable, part of the goods claimed and taken on behalf of the admiral passed by the name of wreck, and part being flotsam did not pass, and entire damages were assessed, judgment was consequently given against the plaintiff (p). § 664. According to ancient authors, treasure trove originally belonged to the finder (q), but by the law of England from a very early period has belonged to the king as his prerogative, or to some lord of a manor or liberty by special grant or prescription (r). Nothing is said to be treasure trove but gold and silver (s), but it may be either bullion, coin, or plate (s). It is immaterial whether it be found hidden in the ground, or in the ruins of any house or other building, or elsewhere (s); but treasure found in the sea still belongs to the finder (t).

What is treasure trove.

Treasure trove, as well as wreck, shall be inquired of by the coroner (u), and the concealment of it is punishable by fine and imprisonment (v).

Concealment.

665. An estray, animal vagans, is properly any beast, not being wild, which is found wandering within some lordship or manor (w), but the term is applied also to swans or cygnets (x), (see post, § 671), although not to any other bird (y).

When no one can make title to estrays, the law gives them to the queen, or to lords of manors claiming under a grant from the Crown (z); but a man cannot have estrays in gross by prescription, because they lie in grant, and will not originally pass without charter (a). If no claim be made within a year and a day, the estray belongs to the lord, but he has not an absolute property in it until the year and day are passed (b); so, it will not be an estray by the common law, although it continues for a year and a day, if it be not proclaimed within a reasonable time (c), and properly, at the next market day of the nearest market town (d), or, according to others, in the two nearest market towns, &c. (e); and the year and day are to be computed from the seizure (g).

What is not

So, if the lord or his bailiff do not seize it as an estray, it shall not be so, for that begins the property (h), except in the case of the queen (i); so, cattle which come for common cannot be estray (k); so, not the queen's cattle which come into the manor of another (k).

Who shall have

666. If cattle stray into the manor of A., and within the year stray to the manor of B., and continue there for a year and a day, and are proclaimed, B. shall have them as estrays (k); so, if the first manor was the queen's manor (k); so, if a stranger within the year takes the cattle, and puts them into the manor again as his own, and they continue there for a year and a day, they will be an estray (l), sed

estray.

667. So, if A. leases his manor, in which an estray was, before the year expired, the lessee, after the expiration of the year and day, shall have it, and not the lessor, for he had the custody only during the year, and the property vests in him who has the custody at the end of the year and day (q).

Right of lessee.

If an estray happen within the manor of the wife, and the husband die before seizure, the wife shall have it, for that the property was not in the wife before seizure (r).

Right of wife.

So, the property of infants and others under disabilities is equally bound, after the year and day, as well in the case of estrays as of wreck (s).

Right of in-

If two tenants in common be of a manor to which estrays belong, no action will lie by the one against the other who should alone seize the estray, unless by prescription the one is to have the first estray, and the other the second, and one of them should take the beast pertaining to the other (t).

Right of tenant

If the lord dies before the year expires, and afterwards the estray continues in the manor for a year and a day, yet the executor of the lord shall have it, and not the heir, for when the year is expired, the property relates to the seizure (u).

How an estray may be used.

669. If the lord uses cattle taken as an estray, by riding or working them, &c., he will be a trespasser ab initio (x); so, a custom alleged, to put cattle taken as an estray into a moor, part of the manor, and there fetter them if they are unruly, is not good (a); but using an estray for necessity is justifiable, as, if a cow be taken it may be milked (b); so, a sheep taken as an estray may be sheared (c); so, fetters may be put on a colt which cannot otherwise be prevented from breaking fences (d); so, an estray should be kept in loco aperto, on land in the lord's possession, being part of the demesnes of the manor (e); and the bailiff of the lord cannot depute his authority by delivering the estray to the care of another (e).

lord's right in

670. It is said in one case, that the lord could not maintain trespass for an estray, until the day and year were passed (f), but he may have a special action on the case for such taking (f); and if a stranger take an estray out of a manor, the lord may have an action of trespass (g); but he cannot prescribe, that if any stranger chase an estray out of the manor, he shall be amerced for the same in the court of

671. A swan, being a royal bird, may, as before observed, be an estray (see ante, § 665), and no one can have a swan mark except by grant or prescription (m), and by the 22 Ed. 4, c. 6, now repealed, a qualification to keep swans was required; and although a subject was then permitted to have swans, yet, if they were without a mark, if any such swans gained their liberty, and were found in open common rivers, they might be seized by the king's officers as royal birds (n); but it is not competent to seize those birds as estrays, if they be lawfully put into the place whence they have been taken, even although they may be in a strange manor; thus, in trespass for taking swans, the defendant made a claim by his plea to estrays as pertaining to his lordship, and said that the swans had strayed, and that proclamation had been made, and that as soon as it was discovered that the swans belonged to the plaintiff, they were delivered up. Swan an estray. Swan marks.

The plaintiff replied, that he was seised of a manor adjoining to the lordship in question, and prescribed to have swans swimming through that lordship from time immemorial; and further, that notice had been given to the defendant that these swans were the plaintiff's; and the replication was held good, for the plaintiff might lawfully put in his swans in the place where they could not be estrays, any more than cattle could so be in places where they ought to Swans claimed by prescription.

have common, thus deciding that a prescription for swans to swim in another's manor or lordship is good (o).

But a prescription for swans must be accurately set out, and therefore, where one prescribed for all wild swans which are animals feræ naturæ, and not marked, in a certain creek, the prescription was held bad, and it was like prescribing for all partridges and pheasants within a manor, which a man cannot have jure privilegii, but so long only as they are within the place (p); but one may prescribe to have a game of swans within his manor, as well as a warren or a park (q); and so a custom that if any swan, which hath its course in any water running to the Thames, within the same county, comes on the land of any man and there builds, and hath cygnets on the same land, then he who hath the property of the swan shall have two of the cygnets, and he who hath the land shall have the third cygnet which shall be of less value than the other two, has been held to be good (r); and in this case there were two plaintiffs, one who was the owner of the cock-birds, and the other of the hens, and they had cygnets between them; and it was held that the plaintiffs should join in one action, because by the custom of the realm, which is the common law in such cases, the cygnets belonged to both the owners in common, and should be divided between them equally (r); so, in Parker v. Combleford (s), it is said that the case 2 R. 3, pl. 15, "Custom for Swans," that the owner of the land shall have a ground-bird is good, for the case which they have to make their nests there.

Right of the

674. Goods forfeited as waif may belong to a subject by the grant from the Crown, and this franchise is usually annexed to manors; but waif is to be claimed only by special grant or prescription, and does not belong to the lord of a hundred or manor by reason of the hundred or manor (h); but to justify seizing of stolen goods, it must be alleged that a felony was committed, and that the goods were waived by the felon (i); so, in an action against the lord for misusing a horse stolen from the plaintiff, who alleged fresh suit and that the felons were attainted, it was held that the defendant ought to have traversed the fresh suit whereof the plaintiff had declared, the property being thereby preserved (h); so, it seems either the stealing or the waiving may be traversed (l).

But deodands do not meet with countenance in Westminster Hall; when a jury has found too little, the courts will not interpose in favour of the Crown or of the lord of the franchise, though they will, if it has found too much, in favour of the subject (p).

§ 679. A market is the privilege within a town to have a market (s). Every fair is a market, but not e contra (t). What is a market and a fair.

This subject embraces the following particulars:—

2. When and how held.
3. Effect of sale in a market or fair.

5. Duties payable in respect of a market or fair.

1. How a Market or Fair is claimed.

679. None can have a market or fair but by grant or prescription (u); but a grant of a fair or market has usually a clause quod non sit ad nocumentum &c.; therefore, if it be to the prejudice of the queen or others in any respect, the patent shall be avoided (x); and if such market or fair be to the nuisance of any one, the patent may be repealed by scire facias (y), though a writ of ad quod damnum had preceded the grant (z), and the words nisi sit ad nocumentum &c. have been omitted in the grant (a); but whether it be to the nuisance or not is a matter of evidence (b).

2. Where and how a Market is to be held.

Place of holding a market,
&c.

680. The usual place where a market is held is the market place, not every place within the same town (c). If the queen grant a fair generally, the grantee may keep it where he pleases (d); so, if she grant a fair to be held in such a town, place, &c., he may keep it in what part of the town he pleases (d), and see also Mosley v. Walker (e), in which latter case it is said, "Generally speaking, where a market is granted to a particular individual, he may either permit every place within the specified limits of the market to be the place where articles may be sold, or he may, if he thinks fit, fix upon a particular place within which the sale shall take place, and he may say that different places shall be appropriated to the sale of different articles." The lord of an ancient market may, by law, have a right to prevent other persons from selling goods in their private houses situated within the limits of his franchise (h), but "It cannot be laid down as a general rule and principle of law, that the grant of a market for the sale of certain things necessarily carries with it an exclusion of the right of sale of similar commodities in a private house (i)." "The question (submitted to the jury) was, whether upon the evidence the franchise of the plaintiff entitled him to that exclusive right. Of that there was abundant evidence, for where there is a grant of a franchise, the exercise of the right under the grant is evidence of the nature and extent of the grant (k)." But the grantee of such a franchise is bound to provide suitable accommodation for those who attend the market (k). "I take it to be implied in the terms in which a market is granted, that the grantee, if he confine it to particular parts within a town, shall fix it in such parts as will from time to time yield to the public reasonable accommodation, and that if the place once allotted ceases to give reasonable accommodation, he is bound, if he has land of his own, to appropriate land on which to hold it, or if not, to get land from other people, in order that the market, which was originally granted for the benefit of the public, as well as for the benefit of the grantee, may be effectually held (k)." But this is a question for the jury, and having, as it appears in this case, been left properly to them, the Court refused to disturb the verdict.

if a merchant sell after the time published, he shall forfeit double the goods sold. By the 27 H. 6, c. 5, a fair or market is not to be held upon principal feasts, Sundays or Good Friday, (four Sundays in harvest excepted), upon forfeiture of all goods sold to the lord of the franchise. And he that has no day for it, but only such festival, shall hold his fair or market within three days before or after proclamation being first made; and he that has other days sufficient, shall hold it the full number of days allotted for his market or fair, such festival days, &c. excepted; and this was in confirmation, as it seems, of the common law (l); but a prescription to hold a fair on the 29th Sept. is good, though it may be a Sunday, for a fair on that day is not void, though the goods then sold shall be forfeited by the 27 H. 6, c. 5 (m).

3. Effect of a Sale in Market overt.

Who bound by sale in market

682. It has been said, that at common law all sales and contracts of anything vendible in fairs or markets overt, should not only be good between the parties, but should bind those that had right thereunto, even infants, femes covert, idiots, and non compotes mentis, also persons beyond sea and in prison, and so, executors and administrators (n); but this rule admits of many exceptions and qualifications:—

P. 1. tit. HORSES), and the property is not changed (q); so it is said in an early case, that the property of goods is not changed by sale in market

3. Although a sale in a shop in London is good, for there is market overt, every day except Sunday, yet the sale to be valid, must be in the open shop, not in a warehouse, nor in any other part of the house(t); so, a sale in a shop is not a sale in market overt, unless the goods are there proper to be sold; therefore, where stolen plate was sold openly in a scrivener's shop on the market day, held, that this sale should not change the property, for a scrivener's shop is not a market overt for plate; sed secus if the sale had been openly in a goldsmith's shop(x); so, the queen cannot grant that a shop should be a market overt(y). Sale in a shop.

4. The contract as well as the sale must be in market overt, therefore, where the contract for the sale of stolen goods was made out of the market, held that the property was not changed by the completion of the sale in the market overt(z). There must be a contract as well as sale.

between the sun rising and sun setting, yet a sale in the night will be good between the parties, although it will not bind a stranger who has right (b). So, a sale in a covert place within a fair or market is bad (c).

8. A custom that a sale in market overt shall be binding is bad, for it tends to a monopoly (d).

In case of pawning.

9. There cannot be a market overt for pawning, and held that the Court cannot take notice of the custom of London, unless it has been certified by the recorder (e).

4. What Duties are payable at a Market or Fair.

683. The principal duties usually payable at a fair or market are toll, stallage, and piccage.

Definition of a toll.

Toll is a reasonable sum due to the lord of the fair or market, for things sold there which are tollable (f); but toll is not of common right incident to a fair or market (f), and cannot, therefore, be claimed except by grant or prescription (g), and, therefore, it is not sufficient to allege the grant of a market, with all tolls belonging, but there must be alleged an express grant or a prescription (h); so, toll is payable of common right only on live cattle, not of victuals or wares, &c. (h); and although as a rule, toll cannot be paid at any market for things brought thither, only for things sold, yet, by custom, toll shall be paid for every thing brought to market, but if it is a new fair, custom will not support it (i). So, if an ancient fair or market returns to the Crown, the toll is not extinct; but if the queen re-grants the fair, the toll passes (k); sed secus if she grants a fair de novo cum omnibus libertatibus pertinent', he shall not have toll (k).

In the former of these two cases it was said, that the king could not grant a toll for things not brought into the market, but that the vill in that case should be taken for the market; in the latter case it was held, that a prescription for toll, in respect of goods sold by sample and afterwards brought into the market, could not be supported.

But a claim of toll to be taken in specie for goods sold in a market is supported by evidence of a right to toll for goods brought into the market and there sold, without shewing any right to toll for goods sold in the market, though not brought there, Moseley v. Pierson (n); and it is there said, "The expression, a sale in the market, imports that the goods sold are brought into the market and ready to be delivered to the purchaser. Now, here the claim is of a toll in specie, which necessarily implies that the commodity in respect of which the toll arises is brought into the market (o)."

in specie.

684. Regularly, toll shall not be paid before the sale, for it is due from the buyer and not from the seller (p), unless there be a special custom to the contrary (q); but the queen shall not pay toll (r), so, tenants in ancient demesne are exempt from the payment of toll (r), and the privilege extends as well to tenants at will as to tenants for life or years (s), and to tenants who hold of a subject as of the queen (t); so, it extends to the lord himself (u); but the exemption is only in respect of such things as arise or grow on the land, or such as are bought for manuring it, and for the necessary use of the tenant and his family, and does not extend to general merchandize (x), and he need not prescribe for the privilege, for it is incident to his estate, therefore it is sufficient to say that he is tenant and inhabitant within the manor of A., which is ancient demesne (y), and it seems not necessary to allege notice that he is tenant in ancient demesne, although it may be advisable so to do (y).

So, if a man has a grant to be discharged of toll in respect of goods bought for his own use and bought since his grant (z); so, he shall be exempted in a fair or market of the queen (z); and so, though the grant be for her only, and not for her, her heirs and successors, yet it is good against the successor (a).

A grantee, to be quit of toll, may plead his exemption (b); so, an inhabitant of a borough exempted by charter (b); so, an inhabitant of the duchy of Lancaster (c); and a prescription for an inhabitant is good, being for a discharge (d).

By the 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 7, it is provided, that the owner of every fair or market should appoint one in a special open place to take the toll, and enter the names and dwellings of all persons parties to a bargain for a horse, and the colour, with one special mark of such horse, and by the 31 El. c. 12, the bookkeeper is to make no entry, unless he truly know the seller of the horse or his voucher, their names and dwellings, and then he shall truly enter the same and the price of the horse, on pain of 5*l.* for every default.

An outrageous toll is any toll when there is none due, or the party is discharged of toll (f), or if more be exacted than is due (f); and, therefore, an action on the case lies against him that takes an outrageous toll, that is, of him that ought to be quit (g), and the judges are to determine whether the toll be reasonable or no (h).

686. Stallage is a duty for the liberty of having stalls in a fair or market (i), or of removing them from one place to another (i). Erecting a stall in a market is not of common right; therefore, whoever will have a stall in a market must first have a licence for that purpose from the owner of the soil, or otherwise trespass lies, Northampton (Mayor, &c.) v. Ward (j); and it is there said, "Every man has of common right a liberty of coming into any public market to buy and sell without paying any toll, if it be not due by custom or prescription, yet if he wants any particular easement or convenience, as a stall in the market, he must have the licence of the owner of the soil for that purpose, if there be no particular sum fixed by the custom of the market for stallage; if there be a fixed sum or duty by custom, that cannot be exceeded, but still he must agree with the owner of the soil (k);" so, it is a trespass to set tables in a market place for the sale of goods thereon, without leave of the owner of the soil (l).

What is pic-cage.

687. Piccage is a duty for picking holes in the lord's ground for the posts of the stalls (q). Stallage and piccage are incident to the soil, for the right to a market and the right to the soil are very different things, and these rights may belong to different persons; therefore, if the queen grant a fair or market with toll certain to one and his heirs, to be held within land that is Borough-English, and the grantee dies, the heir at the common law shall have the fair or market and the toll, but the youngest son shall have the piccage and stallage with the soil by the custom (r).

688. This court is incident to a market as well as a fair, in the same manner as a court-baron is to a manor (s), and, by custom, may be held where there is no fair or market (t). It is a court of record in which the steward is the judge (u), and to this court the following things are essential:—

the court.

1. The cause of action must arise in the time of the fair or market, it cannot take notice of transactions happening on a different day than that on which it sits (x). 2. It must relate to things which concern the market; therefore, for slander of wares previous to the market, the court has no jurisdiction (y). 3. It cannot be held before the mayor, or other person than the steward, by special custom (z). 4. The jurisdiction shall be of contracts in the same fair or market, of goods there bought or sold (a), or for battery or disturbance there (b). 5. It must not be for things done out of the precinct of the fair or market (c), and by the 17 E. 4, the steward shall not hold plea upon pain of 5*l*., unless the plaintiff or his attorney swear that the contract, &c. in the declaration mentioned was within the time and precinct of the fair or market. And if it be sworn, the defendant may plead in abatement or under issue that it was not; and if there be no oath or it be found for the defendant, the plaint shall be dismissed, and the party left to his remedy at common law. But such oath need not appear upon the record (c); so, if it does not appear in pleading that the suit there was for a matter within the jurisdiction, it will be void (d); so, a penal information will not lie in this court, but judgment given on it is not void but voidable (e).

689. A right to appoint a clerk to the fair or market is also incident to the franchise (g); his office consists in inquiring whether the weights and measures are according to the standard (g). He is entitled to his reasonable fees, but he cannot prescribe to have 2*d*. or any other rate for viewing and examining measures (h). Clerk of the market.

may be forfeited either by non-user or misuser. It has been held that the non-user of a fair or market, or courts, or such like liberties, wherein the subjects have interest for their common profit or common justice, is cause of seizure of them ; but the non-user of parks or warrens, or such like, which are to the profit or pleasure of the owner only, is not any cause of their loss or forfeiture (k).

As to forfeiture by misuser the stat. Northampt., 2 Ed. 3, c. 15, provides that if a man holds his fair beyond the time allowed, he forfeits the franchise (l) ; so, if he hold his market at another day (l), or holds his fair for three days when he ought to hold it only for two (l) ; but if a man take outrageous toll, he does not forfeit the market, only the toll (m).

7. Disturbance of a Market, and the Remedies.

What is a disturbance of the ket, &c.

691. The grantee or owner for the time being of the franchise of a market may have an action on the case against a person who erects a stall upon his own ground for selling meat, though he should not take toll or usurp a franchise (n) ; so, in an early case it had been held, that a person could not prescribe to have a market in his own house against one who had the franchise of a market in the same place, Prior of Dunstable's case (o) ; and on the authority of this case it was held, in Mosley v. Walker (p), that by grant or prescription the owner of such a market may prevent persons, being inhabitants, from selling in private houses. But twenty years' uninterrupted use gives a prima facie right to a fair or market, and is a sufficient answer to an indictment for obstructing a highway ; so, if the grantee of a market, under letters-patent from the Crown, suffer another to erect a market in his neighbourhood, and use it for the space of upwards of twenty years without interrup-

692. It seems not to be settled, that the grantee of a newly erected market can, by virtue of such grant merely, maintain an action on the case, for disturbance of a franchise, against a person selling marketable articles in his own shop within the franchise, but not within the limits of the market place, on the market day (r); but a claim by immemorial custom to exclude others from selling such commodities on the market day, is valid in law (s); and where a market for meat, &c. was proved to have been in existence in the reign of James I., proof that the grantees of the market had for the last hundred years appointed market lookers, and that no butchers' shops had existed out of the market place until 1810, and that the shops then set up were objected to by the grantees, was held to be sufficient evidence of such immemorial right (t).

693. But the grantee of a market is bound to provide reasonable accommodation for those who attend the market; therefore, where part of the space granted for a market was used for other purposes than those specified in the grant, and the remaining part became insufficient for public accommodation, held, that the lord of the market could not maintain an action against an individual for selling vegetables in the neighbourhood of his market, and thereby depriving him of toll, even at the time when there was room in the market, without shewing that on the day when the sale took place he gave notice to the seller that there was room within the market (u); and it is a question for the Right to tolls.

694. As tolls are only due by grant or prescription, and cannot be established by usage under a recent charter or by reference to neighbouring markets (y), it seems doubtful whether, if no specific toll be granted in letters-patent, the grantee of a market be entitled to any toll, and whether, in such case, he can support an action for an injury to his market (z).

Rights of corporations and lords of manors.

As a grant of a fair or market may be made either to lords of manors or to boroughs and other places (a), questions may sometimes arise as to the respective rights of these different parties; therefore, where King Charles II. by charter granted to the corporation of Walsall two fairs, to be holden annually, and confirmed to them all markets which had been heretofore holden, with a reservation of the rights of the lord of the manor, it appeared that a market had been holden immemorially in the High-street of Walsall until a very late period, when the corporation finding it inconvenient, removed it to another and more convenient place within the borough; and also that the corporation had exercised other acts of ownership, as by taking down the old market place and erecting a new one, and by ordering that the market and fairs for pigs and other cattle should henceforth be kept in the new market place, and no longer in the High-street; it also appeared that though the lord of the manor appointed the clerk of the market, yet he did not receive any toll from the persons frequenting it; on an indictment, therefore, of the defendant, by the corporation, for a nuisance in erecting stalls in the High-street after the removal of the market, the judge, upon the trial, left it to 695. As to the remedies in case of a disturbance of a market before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 36, abolishing assizes, (see Dig. P. III. tit. LIMITATIONS), "if a fair or market were set up to the nuisance of another, the party aggrieved might have an assize of nuisance (c), but now the remedy is an action on the case as in other cases of disturbance (d); and where a party is a wrongdoer without any claim of right, an indictment for a nuisance may be sustained (e), see ante, § 694. Remedies.

It seems doubtful whether an information in nature of quo warranto for a usurpation upon the Crown, by holding a fair or market, can be granted on the application of a private person (f); but it seems clear, that it will not lie for the bare encouraging and promoting the holding of a market, it being at most a misdemeanour, and no usurpation of a franchise (f).

In some cases, equity will interfere to enforce the lord's right to tolls (g).

§ 696. The subject of corporations as a franchise comprehends the following points:—

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

1. The nature of a corporation, and its different kinds.
2. How created.
3. Incidents to a corporation.
4. How visited.
5. How dissolved.

1. The Nature of a Corporation, and the different Kinds.

697. A corporation is a body to take in succession, framed as to that capacity by policy, and therefore called by Littleton (sect. 413) a body politic; and it is called a body corporate, because the persons are made into a body, and are of capacity to take and grant, &c. (h)

Definition of a corporation.

Of corporations some are sole and some aggregate; a sole corporation consists of one person only, as the queen (i); so, a clergyman, by being made a bishop, prebendary, parson, or vicar, is said to be a sole corporation (h).

Different kinds.
Sole corporation.

A corporation aggregate is an artificial body of men composed of divers constituent members, and is said to be invisible and immortal (l).

Aggregate corporation.

Corporations are either lay or ecclesiastical: lay corporations are either civil or eleemosynary; the civil are erected for different temporal purposes, thus the queen is a corporation to prevent in general the possibility of an interregnum, or vacancy of the throne, and to preserve the possessions of the Crown entire, for immediately upon the demise of one king, his successor is in full possession of the regal rights and dignity (m); so, the chamberlain of London (n). Of other lay corporations some are for general government, as those of mayor and commonalty, &c.; some for a commercial purpose, as the Trinity House for regulating the navigation; so, for the advancement of learning, as the universities, which last it has been held must be ranked among the lay corporations (o).

Of the eleemosynary sort are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms as directed by the founder; of this kind are all hospitals for the maintenance of the sick and poor and impotent, and all colleges both in the universities and out of them; and these eleemosynary corporations are, strictly speaking, lay, even although composed of ecclesiastical persons, and although in some respects they partake of the nature, privileges, and restrictions of ecclesiastical bodies (p); they are, in fact, lay corporations, because they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, or to the visitation of the ordinary or diocesan in their spiritual character (q).

Ecclesiastical corporations are where the members that compose them are entirely spiritual persons, such as bishops, certain deans and prebendaries, all archdeacons, parsons, and vicars, which, as they hold their possessions singly, are sole corporations; and deans and chapters, which are corporations aggregate; and if a person who is a corporation sole, makes with others a chapter, as by being an incumbent of the same preferment, he becomes both a corporation sole and a member of a corporation aggregate (r).

2. How created.

Created by the queen.

698. The queen by virtue of her prerogative is the only person that can erect either an ecclesiastical or lay corporation (s), for the pope could not have founded or incorporated a college, &c. here, but it ought to have been done by the king himself (t); and although one corporation may be made out of another, yet it must be by the queen's charter, therefore, where the mayor and commonalty of London prescribed to make another corporation in the city, though their customs are confirmed, yet it was held not to be good without the king's charter (u).

INCORPORAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

In the case of Cuddon v. Eastwick (x), it is said, that a corporation may make a fraternity; but in other reports of that case the point is not noticed (y), and it is denied to be law in R. v. The Coopers' Company, Newcastle (z), where it is said, that this can be effected only by the legislature or the Crown; so, a patent procured by some few persons only shall not bind the rest, nor can the inhabitants of a town be incorporated without the assent of the major part of them (a); so, as it is the queen's charter that creates corporations, no such charter may mould and frame them as it shall think fit (b).

One corporation not to be made by another.

Some corporations may be by prescription, yet such prescription always supposes an original grant from the Crown, which being lost or worn out by time, yet having run into a prescription, still continues to unite them (c).

By prescription.

It is now settled that a corporation can only be created by the Crown, or by Act of Parliament (d); yet the queen may give power to a common person to name the corporation, and the persons it is to consist of; but when he hath so done, this corporation does not take its essence from the common person, but from the queen (e); so, by the 39 El. c. 5, every person seised in fee simple, may, by deed inrolled in Chancery, erect an hospital or house of correction which shall be incorporated, and have perpetual succession, and shall be visited by such persons as shall be nominated by the founders thereof, &c. INCORPORAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

In creating a corporation, it does not appear that the law requires any set form of words; any words equivalent will suffice, as "constituimus the men of such a town a corporation," viz. a mayor, &c. (g); and of ancient time, the inhabitants of a town were incorporated when the king granted to them to have guildham mercatoriam (h).

3. Naming of Corporations.

True description of a corporation necessary.

699. The names of corporations are given of necessity, for the name is, as it were, the very being of their constitution, or, which is the same thing, the knot of their combination, without which they cannot perform any corporate acts (i), for the name of a corporation is as the name of baptism (k); but, though a corporation must have a name, yet that must be understood to be expressed in the patent, or implied in the nature of the thing (l), as if the queen should incorporate the inhabitants of Dale, with power to choose a mayor annually, though no name be given, yet it is a good corporation by the name of the mayor and commonalty, and by that name it shall sue and be sued, or do all legal acts (l); and although in legal proceedings, any variation from the true name of the corporation has been held fatal (m), particularly where such variation prejudicially affected the rights of parties, yet, where by statute a special authority was delegated to a corporation, affecting the property of individuals, held, that the mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, were not sufficiently described by the "mayor and commonalty, and citizens (n);" but a very minute variation therein is not material (o), particularly where the strict construction would work an injustice; therefore, where a corporation, describing themselves as the warden, &c., but omitting the name of their founder, by deed, under their common seal, and under the authority of an Act of Parliament, sold part of their estate, it was held, that the misdescription of the corporation, in omitting the name of their founder was immaterial, and that the grant made by the corporation was not void by reason of such misdescription (p).

INCORPOREAL
HEREDITA-
MENTS.

700. A corporation may change its name, as corporations frequently do in new charters, and will still retain its powers, rights, and privileges (q), and the corporation shall retain under its new name the possessions which it had before (r), and shall recover by its new name a debt owing to it before (s), notwithstanding there have been judgment of ouster against individual members of the corporation, for the corporation is not thereby dissolved (t). On the other hand it shall be subject to bonds, annuities, &c., as before (u); but a distinction has been taken where the new charter alters the constitution of the corporation, and new models it, there they shall lose their old names; but if the constitution remains as to all its integral parts the same, though the new charter gives them a new name, the old one remains, as if a mayor be added, or a mayor and master be made mayor and alderman, or an abbot and convent a dean and chapter, there they lose their old names, because new integral parts of the corporation are added; therefore, where an action of debt was brought against a corporation under its old name, the plaintiffs were nonsuited (x); but a corporation may have two names, one by prescription and one by grant (x); so, a corporation may be incorporated by one name, and power may be given them to sue and purchase lands by another name (y); so, where a corporation declaring in covenant by their modern name, stated that the citizens, &c. were from time immemorial incorporated by divers names of incorporation, and at the time of making the indenture by A. B., which they declared on, were known by a certain other name, by which name A. B. granted them a certain water-course, and covenanted for quiet enjoyment, held, that the deed granting the water-course to them by such name was evidence as against the defendants who claimed under the grantor, that the corporation was known by that name at the time, upon an issue taken upon that fact (z).

Where a corporation takes its rise from the queen's charter, the queen, by granting and the corporation by accepting another charter, may alter the name, because it is done with the consent of all the parties, who are competent to consent to the alteration (a); but the constitution of a corporation as settled by Act of Parliament, cannot be varied by the acceptance of any charter inconsistent with it (a).

4. Incidents to a Corporation.

Powers of corporation to purchase, &c.

701. When a corporation is duly created all incidents as to purchase and grant, to sue and be sued, &c., are tacitly annexed to it, and although no power to make laws, statutes, or ordinances is given by a special clause to a corporation, it is included by law in the very act of incorporation, but their by-laws ought always to be subject to the laws of the realm, as subordinate thereto (b).

Aggregate corporations have also a power necessarily implied of electing members in the room of such as go off (d); and a prescriptive right in persons of a definite description to be admitted burgesses of Nottingham was held by the court not to exclude the incidental power arising by implication of law to the corporation at large, to secure their perpetual succession by voluntary elections of burgesses ad libitum (e).

Formerly it was held that a power of removing its members was not incident to a corporation, and that no freeman of any corporation could be disfranchised by the corporation, unless they had authority by the express words of the grant, or by prescription (f), but in Teddersley's case (g) it was held, that reasonable cause ought to be shewn, and in Lord Bruce's case (h) it is said, that in modern times the opinion has been, that a power of amotion is incident to a corporation (i).

Power of amo-tion of members.

Corporations have also many of the franchises already mentioned, but these must be mentioned in the charter and granted by express words (k); and they may claim by prescription as natural persons (l); but the corporation of a town cannot prescribe for the freeholders of the town (m).

704. So, aggregate corporations, consisting of a constant succession, can regularly do no act without writing, therefore gifts to and by them must be by deed (t); so, a corporation aggregate cannot, without deed, command their bailiff to enter into certain lands of their lessee for years, for a condition broken (u); nor to enter for a forfeiture, nor to enter into lands purchased (x); so, not to make livery of seisin (y); so, not to accept an assignee of a lease as tenant (z).

So, if a lease for years be made to a corporation aggregate, they cannot make an actual surrender without deed (a);

P. III. tit. MORTMAIN), has imposed many restrictions on bequests and devises to corporations, as well as others for charitable purposes; and as to gifts inter vivos, several statutes from Magna Charta, 9 H. 3, c. 36, to 9 G. 2, c. 36, known by the name of Mortmain Acts, (see Dig., sup.), have abridged the power of purchasing by corporations, so that now a corporation, whether ecclesiastical or lay, must have a licence from the Crown before they can exercise the privilege of purchasing, which is otherwise incident to them at common law. By some statutes, however, corporations are enabled to take lands, &c. given to them for particular purposes, as by the 43 G. 3, c. 107, the governors of Queen Anne's bounty may, notwithstanding the Statutes of Mortmain, take lands, &c. bequeathed to them, and by the 45 G. 3, c. 34, personal property may be given to this charity without deed. if they have no lands nor goods, there is no way to compel appearance either in a court of law or equity, for it is a rule, that for a public concern the sheriff cannot distrain any individual member of a corporation (r); but in an extraordinary case, where they have no property and will not appear, and when consequently a court of equity can give no relief, the plaintiff may apply to the House of Lords, who will make a specific order for relief (s). The summons to appear must be served on the mayor or other chief officer, and that is sufficient (t).

A corporation aggregate cannot distrain in their own persons, but by their bailiff, and therefore no replevin lies against them by the name of their corporation (u); so, it cannot sue as a common informer (x). on the general issue being pleaded, they prove that by the law of the foreign country, they were effectually created a corporation (e). But in justifying a trespass in the assertion of a privilege or franchise of a corporation, it is necessary to shew not only the existence of the corporation, but the manner in which it claims to be so, whether by charter, prescription, or Act of Parliament (f).

A sole corporation having two capacities, natural and corporate, must always shew in what right he sues (g); but an aggregate corporation having only a corporate capacity, a suit in their corporate name can be only in that capacity; therefore, it is not necessary that a mayor and commonalty should allege seisin in right of the corporation (h), or a warden and scholars should allege seisin in right of their college (i).

In equity corporations answer under their common seal and not upon oath, but it having been found that they would answer nothing to their prejudice, the Court have ordered that the clerk of the company, and such principal members as the plaintiff thinks fit, should answer upon oath (k). Sometimes where a discovery is necessary before a plaintiff can bring his action against a corporation, a bill may be filed against the corporation and their secretary or principal officer for this purpose; but in that case, if any of the matters called for would be prejudicial to the corporation, and not necessary to the plaintiff's case, the officer will not be compelled to discover such parts (l). 712. Corporations, in their character of owners or occupiers of houses or lands, are subject to the same burthens as individuals are subject to in the same character. Having lands or tenements in any shire, and residing in any town corporate, they are said to be inhabitants within the purview of the 22 H. 8, c. 3, for the repair of bridges (o); so, they are liable to be rated to the poor within the 43 El. c. 2, in respect of lands whereof they are seised in fee for their own profit (p); so, they are rateable to the repairs of the church (q); so, they may be bound exclusively to the repair of a highway, bridge, or creek, by reason of tenure, or they may be so compelled by force of a general prescription that they ought and have been used to do so from time immemorial, without an allegation that they used to do so in respect of the tenure of certain lands, or for any other consideration, because a corporation, in judgment of law, never dies; and, therefore, if they were ever bound to such a duty, they must continue to be so always (r); neither is it any plea that they have done it out of charity, for what they have always done they shall be presumed to have been always bound to do; therefore, if a bishop or prior hath once or twice of alms repaired a bridge, it bindeth not, and

In equity the private members of a company have been made liable to the company's debts, where the company had no goods (f); and as to the liability of the members of joint-stock companies under different statutes, see Dig. P. II. tit. COMPANIES.

716. The necessity of summoning the members, and the mode of so doing, is another point on which the validity of corporate proceedings depends. Where a corporate act, as an election, is to be done not on a charter day, whether to be done by the whole corporation or by a select number, notice of the meeting must be given to all; but where an election is to be at a charter day, fixing a particular day, there a summons is not necessary, for every member is bound to take notice of the day (s); but where the whole corporation are summoned for a particular purpose, as to receive the resignation of a common councilman, a select body, who are all present and consenting, may, at the same meeting, without any particular summons to them for that purpose in their select capacity, proceed to the election of a common councilman in the place of the other resigned, the power of election being in the select body, and the charter not requiring any previous summons, *R. v. though by accident, and without notice, their acts would be good, but the acts of a majority merely in such a case would not be binding; so, in R. v. Wake (x), it was held, that where ever notice is given for one particular business, the body cannot go into other business, unless the whole body is met, and it is done by consent.

Where a summons is necessary, it is not sufficient that the usual and general orders be given to the summoning officer, the latter must actually do everything he possibly can to summon all the members of the select body (y); and it is laid down as a rule, that where there is a usual method of notice, that cannot be dispensed with, though there be an actual summons of all the members, unless, indeed, every single member be present at the meeting, and consent to waive it (z), but notice to non-residents is not necessary (a).

717. Although it is now settled that a power of amotion or disfranchising its members is incident to a corporation (b), yet a removal being an act of an odious nature, all clauses concerning it in a charter must receive a strict interpretation; therefore, where a charter empowers a majority to remove a person, held, that the word "majority" should be understood a majority of the whole corporation (c); so, in such case a general summons without specifying any particular act for which the meeting is called is not sufficient, it is necessary to mention that it is intended to consider the removal of the particular person (d); so, where it is intended to remove any one of the members or officers of a corporation, it is absolutely necessary, not only that he should be summoned generally to attend, but he must have a particular summons to attend, and answer the particular charge alleged against him (e); but under certain circumstances such notice may be dispensed with, as where a man is charged in plenis comitiis, and ordered to prepare his defence by such a time, this will be good, though there be no actual summons, because if the party be heard, it is sufficient (f); but it seems to be doubtful, whether his being charged and answering in the same assembly will cure the want of notice (g).

When a man is removable for non-residence, there is no necessity to summon him, because he is out of the reach of summons (h); but if he be removable for non-attendance at the corporate assembly, he must have had personal notice to attend, and that his presence was necessary, for the usual notice of the intended meeting will not be sufficient, unless that usual notice be personal (i).

A man may be constituted a burgess, or appointed to an office by deed under the common seal, and in that case he ought to be discharged in the same manner, but where the party is constituted or appointed by election, nothing more is required than an entry in the corporation books, and he may be discharged by an order entered in the same manner (k); so, where an office is granted by deed, the resignation or surrender must also be by deed, but where an officer is appointed by election, the corporation may accept his resignation or surrender by parol before them (l); as to what must be done by deed or otherwise, see ante, § 704.

called an inceptive election, and on the death of the predecessor to admit the person before nominated, which completes the election, yet such an election is not binding on the electors, and when the vacancy happens they may elect another (m).

If the election of a particular officer be, by ancient charter, vested in one body, a subsequent one cannot of itself alter the mode of election; but if the subsequent charter be accepted by the corporation at large, and they act in conformity to it, and acquiesce, such charter is good, and this submission and acquiescence shall be an evidence of their consent (n). There may be an election in one body, and approbation in another (o); so, a charter may give a power of election to a less number than the majority of a definite body; and in a prescriptive corporation, a usage to this effect is evidence of such a charter (p); so, where the person elected is unqualified, and the electors have notice of the want of qualification, their votes to him are thrown away, and the person who has the next greater number is to be considered as duly elected, and is entitled to be sworn in (q); so, where a candidate is proposed in a corporate meeting duly assembled, and a majority of the persons assembled protest against any election, and do not propose any other candidate, the minority may elect the candidate proposed (r); so, where the time and manner of election are not fixed by charter or prescription, it is competent to a corporation to make regulations respecting them (s). executors, administrators, or joint tenants, although they may be trustees, and the members regularly cannot be witnesses for the corporation (t); so, they cannot commit treason, or felony, or be excommunicated (t).

6. How Corporations are visited.

719. The visitation of corporations comprehends in it—

- a. By whom the visitation may be made.
- b. Extent of the visitor's jurisdiction.
- c. How far the visitatorial power may be controlled.

a. By whom Visitation may be made.

As a rule, civil corporations are subject to the visitation of the queen in her Court of Queen's Bench; spiritual corporations are visited in ecclesiastical matters by the ordinary; and eleemosynary corporations by the founder, his heirs or assigns (u), but the term is most commonly applied to spiritual or eleemosynary corporations.

Visitation of corporations by the queen.

As to spiritual corporations, it is said that the king, by the ancient law of the realm, had power to visit and reform all abuses in the church (x); therefore, all free chapels of the king's foundation are visitable by the queen and not by the ordinary (y); so, all hospitals and donatives (y); so, though governors of an hospital or school are appointed, yet, if they have not an express visitatorial power given to them, the queen may visit them (z); so, by the 25 H. 8, c. 21, archbishops and others shall have no authority to visit any college, hospital, &c. before exempt from their visitation, but visitation shall be by the king, &c.; so, by the 31 H. 8, c. 13, all monasteries, &c. dissolved, and all churches belonging to them, although before exempt, shall be within the visitation of the ordinary or of the queen, &c.; so, where

The visitation of the queen's free chapels, &c. shall be by her chancellor (b), and if any other visit them, prohibition lies (c); so, the queen may make visitation by special commissioners (d), as provided by 25 H. 8, c. 21, as to visiting colleges, &c. before exempt; so, by the 1 El. c. 1, all privileges, jurisdictions, &c. heretofore used for visiting the ecclesiastical estate, persons, &c. shall be annexed to the Crown.

720. All spiritual persons generally are subject to the visitation of the bishop or other ordinary (e); so, by the 2 H. 5, c. 1, the ordinary shall inquire of all hospitals not founded by the king, of the manner of their foundation, governance, &c., and though the patronage of a deanery be given to the queen by Act of Parliament, with a saving of all rights, &c. to all strangers except the bishop, and the queen appoints a dean, the dean is visitable by the ordinary notwithstanding the saving, for this relates to the possessions, and the deanery is spiritual; so, if an hospital be suppressed by Act of Parliament, and their possessions vested in the queen, the visitation of them does not thereby cease till the incorporation of them be dissolved (e); so, every spiritual hospital shall be visited by the ordinary, but a lay corporation he neither can nor ought to visit (g); so, by the 14 El. c. 5, after the death of the founder, if no visitor be appointed, the bishop, or his chancellor, shall visit all hospitals within his diocese, to see that they be ordered according to the statutes of the foundation (g).

Visitation shall be made without commission, for it is under the Great Seal (i), and by the ancient law it ought to be annual (k), but by the modern practice the bishop makes only a triennial visitation (k).

Visitation by the founder.

721. If any foundation for charitable purposes be made by a subject, and no special visitor appointed, the founder and his heirs by the common law are visitors (l), as the founder of a college or hospital not spiritual (m); if governors be appointed, but no visitor, the governors shall visit (n); so, if a common person be founder, he shall visit, although the queen afterwards gives to the same corporation greater possessions (o).

So, the founder or patron of any eleemosynary foundation and his heirs are visitors, though the patron does not claim to be so during his life (p); and this visitatorial power is incident to the patronage by the common law, not introduced by any canon or ecclesiastical law (p).

So, upon the foundation of any corporation aggregate for a charity, the founder may constitute a special visitor (q), and as the power of appointing a visitor is entirely in the founder, he may delegate it either generally or specially; if he appoint a general visitor without any restraint, the person so appointed has all incidental powers; but a person constituted visitor in general terms may be restrained in particular instances, and a founder may appoint a special visitor for a particular purpose and no further. So, he may make a general visitor, and yet appoint an inferior particular power, to be executed by another person; thus, the visitation at large may be in one person, and that of one of the members as the head may be in another person who shall be

No technical or set form of words is necessary for the appointment of a visitor; "visitor sit Episcopus Eliensis," is an appointment of a general and perpetual visitor (s); and a person may be a general or special visitor without any express appointment, by construction and implication from various branches of the statutes (s); so, if the founder shews his intention that a certain individual, or constituted body, or corporation sole shall exercise those powers which a visitor would have, that has the effect of an appointment (t); so, a power to interpret and determine doubts upon the statutes, if given in clear words, may itself constitute a visitatorial power (u).

Form of appointing a visitor.

If the founder dies, without making any appointment of a visitor, and without heirs, it will in that case devolve upon the queen, to be executed by the Great Seal (x).

b. Extent of the Visitor's Jurisdiction.

722. It is only over eleemosynary foundations that the visitatorial power, properly so called, extends (y); and the ordinary may in his general visitation, by virtue of his general power, deprive a canon or prebendary for incontinency or other offences described in the statutes; and this of his own authority, without observing all the forms the statutes may appoint (z). So, the power of a visitor must be regulated according to the statutes of the college, or customs of the place (a), "and it must be collected from the whole purview of the statutes, considered together, what power the founder meant to give to the visitor (b)."

A visitor has a general authority to inspect that the college, &c. be governed according to the statutes of the founder (c), and may make visitation for redress of grievances (c); so, to proceed upon a grievance done in the time of his predecessor, R. v. All Souls College, &c. (d), in which case it was decided that the visitor can admit, as well as oust a fellow; but in R. v. St. John's College, &c. (e), it was held that the visitor has no power to refuse a nominee to a vacant fellowship, for until he is of the foundation the visitor has no jurisdiction over him, and in this case it was added, "The visitor shall determine all that relates to persons that are of the foundation; but here is a collateral interest in the city of Bristol, they are no part of the college, and the visitor has no power before a person is made a member;" so, in R. v. Windham (f), it was held that a visitor could only decide private disputes between the members of a college, &c., but not suits by a stranger against the body (f).

But the power of a visitor extends to all new fellowships and scholarships engrafted on the old foundation, unless there be any particular exception by the terms of the new foundation (g).

723. A bishop, as visitor of a dean and chapter, seems to have no jurisdiction to determine between the members on the subject of their corporate property, for this is held to be a great question (h); but it is settled that where the dispute is between the body and the executors or administrators of a deceased member he has no jurisdiction in the matter (h); so, it is clear that he cannot by virtue of such power fill up a vacancy in the stalls of the cathedral by lapse, such an office being a freehold (i); and whether he can, as visitor, even make a temporary election to such stalls is not settled (i). So, where an estate is in the college, that is, in the whole body, and they are to act in a trust, the visitor cannot meddle in a matter which is the subject of such trust (k); but subsequent benefactions may be put under the power of the visitor or not, at the will of the donor (k), and he may prescribe the manner in which the visitor shall exercise his power (l); so, though a general visitor has incidental power, yet the founder may restrain him as to particular instances, as where the Crown reserved to itself the right of making statutes; in that case, the altering of statutes is excepted from the visitor's power, St. John's College v. Toddington (m); and in this case it is said, "Where a body of statutes has been given by the founder I should doubt extremely whether a visitor can alter those statutes or give new laws, whatever may have been the notion in former times (n)." See further infra, § 724.

c. How far a Visitor's Power may be controlled.

724. If a visitor gives sentence as to what comes within his jurisdiction, it shall be definitive, for no appeal lies to the queen, or elsewhere (o); and, therefore, if his sentence or deprivation be shewn in pleading, it is not necessary to say for what cause it was (p); so, the queen's courts will not anticipate the judgment of a visitor, or take away his jurisdiction, if the case in which they are called upon to interfere appears to be within the scope of the general visitatorial power (q); so, his sentence shall not be examined in a colla-

B. would restrain (y); so, if the statutes of a college give to the same person who is visitor the power of appointing to an office one out of two persons returned to him by the college, he has that appointment not as visitor, but by virtue of such power, and therefore must make choice of one of the persons returned to him; and if he assume the appointment of any other person, the Court of Q. 725. It is now settled where there is no question in whom the right of visitation is vested, and a visitor refuses to hear an appeal, the Court of Queen's Bench will compel him by mandamus to exercise his visitatorial power, but it will not compel him to give a particular decision upon the merits or control his judgment, and the visitor is not obliged to hear the party personally, or to receive parol evidence, it is sufficient if he receives the grounds of the appeal and gives an answer to them in writing (c); and in R. v. Bland (d), it is said that the bare averment of there being a visitor is not sufficient to exclude the jurisdiction, but the extent of his authority must appear, and the Court must be satisfied that he can do complete justice, otherwise a mandamus will be issued; but as to the contrary decisions on this point, see Skinn. 13; also *R. v. Court will grant a mandamus directed to him for that purpose (f).

other cases.

726. Where the public laws of the land are violated, the Court of Queen's Bench will interfere, for a visitor has no authority to determine matters against the statutes of the realm, for he is a private judge who is to determine only offences against the statutes of the college where he is visitor, Case of St. John's College, Cambridge (g), which was a case of neglect to take the required oaths.

In equity.

If the performance of a trust is to be decreed, a court of equity must be resorted to, for a visitor is incompetent to do complete justice, as where a rectory, not the founder's property, was given in special trust, and this trust was limited by rules differing from and in some parts contrary to the statutes, held, that the visitor, who was bound to judge only according to the statutes, could not give a remedy on this trust, but the college was obliged to apply to the Court of Chancery (h); and it cannot differ the case, that the corporation of the college happened to be the trustees, for suppose it had been on trust to present a member of another, the visitor of this college could have no power over it (i); so, if a college agree with a stranger to grant him a lease, and refuse to perform the agreement, the remedy is by bill in equity for specific performance, and not by appeal to the visitor (k).

So, with regard to the revenue of a charity, where there is a visitor who is clothed with a trust for the management of the same, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to compel a due application thereof (l); particularly in cases of alleged breach of trust, a petition signed and allowed by the Attor-

7. How Corporations may be dissolved.

727. A corporation may be dissolved in three ways, that is, either by abuser or misuser, and thereby a forfeiture (p); by surrender (q); or by the death of all its members (r). Modes of dissolving corporations.

As to the first cause of dissolution, since all franchises flow from the bounty of the Crown, there is a tacit or implied condition annexed to such grants, which, if broken, forfeits the whole franchise, as if a corporation should impose new taxes, which is contrary to law (s), City of London case (t); see also Smyth's case (u); in this last case it was held, that though a corporation may be forfeited, yet that the proceedings and judgment (which was never recorded) in the quo warranto against the city did not dissolve the body politic, or make their subsequent acts void. In R. v. Amery (x), a judgment against a corporation quousque, &c., in default of appearance, was held to operate as a final judgment to dissolve the corporation, if they did not appear in the same term, or the next at furthest, but this judgment was afterwards reversed in error (x). and the franchises of the City are preserved from forfeiture for any cause whatever.

The debts of a corporation either to or from it are totally extinguished by its dissolution; but where a new charter is granted, this revives the rights and liabilities of the old corporation (y).

Surrender.

728. As to a surrender, although a corporation may be dissolved by surrendering the charter, yet the surrender of an old charter is void for want of enrolment (z), and a charter granted on a void surrender is void, Piper v. Dennis (a); see also R. v. Osbourne (b), where this point is fully recognized. Though a dean and chapter have surrendered all their possessions to the queen, yet their corporation continues, and they remain a chapter of the bishop to assist him in spiritual matters (c).

As to the dissolution of a corporation by the death of parties, if all the members of an aggregate corporation die, the body politic is dissolved (d); but if the king make a corporation, consisting of twelve men, to continue always in succession, and when one of them dies, the others choose one in his place, held, that if three or four of them died, yet all acts done by the rest shall be sufficient (e); so, if any corporation aggregate, as mayor and commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a feoffment and letter of attorney to deliver seisin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean, but the attorney may well execute the power after their death, because the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which subsists after the death of the mayor or dean; sed secus if the mayor or dean be named by their own private names, and

Where a corporation consists of several distinct integral parts, if one of those parts become extinct, whether by the death of the persons of whom it is composed, or by any other means, it seems to have been doubted in Colchester (Mayor, &c.) v. Seaber (g), but was settled in R. v. Pasmore (h), that when an integral part of a corporation is gone, and the corporation has no power of restoring it, or of doing any corporate act, the corporation is so far dissolved that the Crown may grant a new charter to a different set of men.

If lands are given to a corporation which is afterwards dissolved, the donor shall have the lands again, for the law annexes such a condition in every grant to a body politic (i); but in Hal. MSS., 20 Ja. C. B., (citing 21 E. 4. 1; 21 H. 7. 9; also Johnson v. Morris), it is said that the lands shall escheat; and the case of Johnson v. Norway (k), probably the same case as that cited by Lord Hale, is also against the donor, but it is not there said that the judges finally decided the point, see also contrà, Southwell v. Wade (l), wherein is my Lord Coke's judgment. A debt due to a corporation still remains, though their name is changed by a new charter (m), see further on this point, ante, § 699.

732. Franchises may also be lost by forfeiture. Some franchises are lost by non-user, as a fair, market, court, or such like liberties, wherein the subjects have an interest for their common profit or common justice, these will be forfeited by disuse, and non-user will then be a cause of seizing the same, but the non-user of parks or warrens, or such like, which are to the profit only or pleasure of the owner, is not any cause of their forfeiture (g); so, a corporation may be forfeited by a breach of the trust reposed in them (h); see further, ante, § 372; also as to forfeiture generally, see post, TITLE TO THINGS REAL.

TENURES.

Definition of the word "tenure."

§ 733. Under the word "tenure" is comprehended every kind of holding of an estate, but is more properly applied to any holding which is coupled with a service, derived from the feudal law, according to which it became a maxim, although now little more than a fiction, that all lands were held either mediately or immediately of the queen, by some service, whence the thing holden was designated by the name of a "tenement," the person holding by that of "tenant," and the manner of holding by that of "tenure."

TENURES.

734. Upon this principle is grounded the distinction between things lying in tenure, and those lying in grant. As a rule, an incorporeal hereditament holden of a subject does not lie in tenure, for there could be no tenure without some service; and to every service, except that which is done by frankalmoigne, distress was and still is incident; but as there is not in an incorporeal hereditament anything upon which the lord to whom the service is due can distrain, in case the service be not performed, an incorporeal hereditament is said not to lie in tenure (a); therefore, a fair does not lie in tenure, because the grantor has no remedy by distress for the service reserved in the grant of a fair (b); so, an advowson appendant to a manor does not lie in tenure, for as such advowson is appendant to the whole manor, the grantor cannot enter and make distress upon any one part of the manor for the service reserved (c); but an incorporeal hereditament holden immediately of the Crown lies in tenure, for the queen has by her prerogative a power of distraining in any part of the tenant's land, for the services reserved in the grant of the incorporeal estate (d).

Things lying in tenure.

Things lying in grant.

So, in some cases, even an incorporeal hereditament may lie in tenure, although it be holden of a subject, as the vesture or herbage of land, for a distress may be upon the land for the service reserved in the grant of the vesture or herbage (e); and the better opinion seems to be that an advowson in gross lies in tenure, because the grantor may distrain upon the glebe, if any beast of the patron be there, for the service reserved in the grant of the advowson (f); so, a remainder and reversion, though both incorporeal, nevertheless lie in tenure, for although the grantor has no remedy for the service reserved during the continuance of the particular estate, yet he may, as soon as this is determined, distrain for the service, and if it be a pecuniary one, for the arrear thereof (g).

Distinction of different tenures.

Knight's service, &c.

735. Tenures are distinguished primarily in reference to the services coupled with them, as tenure by knight's service, tenure by escuage or service in a voyage royal, tenure by grand or petit serjeanty, tenure by cornage, that is, by winding a horn, and tenure by castleguard, that is, by defending a castle, some of which have been abolished by the 12 C. 2, c. 24, and others have been suffered to remain.

Tenures in capite.

Some tenures are so named from the person of whom the land was held, as tenure in capite where the holding was of the person of the king, and tenure in gross where the holding was of a subject, either as of his person or as of an honour or manor of which he was seised. Before the statute Quia Emptores, 18 E. 1, c. 1, any person might by a grant of land have created a tenure as of his person, or as of his honour or manor, and although by Magna Charta, c. 32, a man could not alien so much of his land as not to leave enough to answer the services due to the superior lord, yet as that statute did not remedy the evil then complained of, it is provided by the 18 E. 1, c. 1, that if any tenant should alien any part of his land or tenement in fee, the alienee should hold the part so aliened immediately of the chief lord of the fee, and should be forthwith charged with the service for so much as pertained to the said lord for such part in proportion to the whole quantity of the land. Since this statute, if a lord conveyed a customary estate to the tenant, he could not reserve to himself the ancient services, for by reason of the statute, the tenant must thenceforth hold of the superior lord, and not of the grantor (h).

TENURES.

736. As this statute, although made after the Statute de Donis, is confined to lands and tenements, of which the fee is granted, yet if a gift in tail were made, the donee should hold of the donor and not of the chief lord; for, so long as the reversion continued in him, the donee must hold of him, and the law will not suffer the donee to hold both of the donor and of the chief lord (i); but if a baron seised in fee of an inheritance in the right of his feme, made a gift in tail, the donee should not hold of the baron, but of the lord of whom the feme held, because the baron had nothing but in right of the feme (k).

Extent of the statute.

Notwithstanding this statute speaks only of estates in fee simple, yet if a gift was made to A. for life or in tail with remainder to B. in fee, the tenant for life or in tail should hold of the chief lord, for as the whole fee is departed with by the donor, neither of the donees can hold of the donor, and consequently both must hold of the chief lord (l); if the tenant in tail had the reversion in himself, there, although the two estates continued distinct, yet as he could not hold of himself, the tenure of the estate tail was suspended, and he was tenant to the lord in fee (m); so, as a man seised of two manors might before this statute by a feoffment in fee, so he may now by a gift in tail, convey a parcel of one manor and a parcel of another to be holden of himself as one tenancy of the same service, and the service shall in that case be regardant to both manors (n).

lay kind, but the tenure in frankalmoigne, or by divine service, is of the spiritual kind.

TENURES.
Lay and spiritual.

739. Of these different tenures, one, namely tenure in villenage which was another name for slavery, has fallen into absolute disuse, and those which in their origin were also base have long ceased to be so, as will appear more fully hereafter. Of the free tenures, some, as tenure by knight's service, escuage, and socage in capite, have, with all their burthensome incidents, as homage, wardship, marriage, and relief, &c., been abolished by the 12 C. 2, c. 24, which provides that all lands held of his Majesty or any other person should be turned into free and common socage. There remain among the tenures of the free kind which demand further consideration, only grand and petty serjeanty, socage tenure, tenure in burgage, and tenure in gavelkind, see infra, § 747 et seq. The tenures of inferior origin that are still extant are copyhold tenure, customary freehold, and tenure in ancient demesne, with some variations thereof, see infra, § 765 et seq.

What tenures are still remaining or otherwise.

12 C. 2, c. 24.

740. On the feudal principle before mentioned, of all lands being holden of the queen, estates in land, though unconnected immediately with any service, are described in similar terms as an estate in fee simple, the owner of which, though it is the highest of all estates, is described as a holder, namely, tenant in fee; so, in like manner, tenant in fee tail, for life, in dower, and the like; and the obligations arising from tenure still attach to the ownership of such estates, as an obligation to repair highways and bridges, see ante, § 103; so, a liability to be assessed to the sewers' rate, § 115.

§ 741. Free and common socage properly denotes a tenure by any certain and determinate service, by which it was mainly distinguished from knight's service. The incidents of socage tenure before the statute were fealty, aids, relief, primer seisin, wardship, marriage, fines for alienation, and escheats. Fealty was the oath taken by the tenant which served as a bond between him and the lord. This oath, which is not taken away by the statute, may be required by every lord of whom tenements are holden at this day, and usually draws after it suit of court (a).

Fealty, &c., incident to socage tenure.

742. Aids for knighting the son, and marrying the eldest daughter, were fixed as to their amount by the 28 E. 1, c. 36, but are abolished by the 12 C. 2, c. 24.

Aids.

Relief, which was a fine paid to the lord on taking up the estate on the death of the last tenant, was and still is due on socage tenure, and as it is an incident of common right to this tenure, it is not necessary to set forth a title to it in replevin (b). A relief of a knight's fee was 5*l*., or one-quarter of the supposed value of the land, but a socage relief was one year's rent (c); so, a relief in knight's service was only payable if the heir was of full age at the death of his ancestor, but it was otherwise with a socage relief, which, as Littleton says, must be paid presently, or the lord might distrain for the same (d).

The statute reserves the relief incident to socage tenure, and therefore, where lands in fee simple, or fee tail, are holden by a rent, a relief is due of common right upon the death of the tenant, that is, when the same is in possession, but if only a remainder or reversion, expectant upon an estate for life, descends on the heir, the relief is not leviable until after the death of the tenant for life, and it seems doubtful whether it be payable at any time (e). Where the tenure is by fealty only, no relief is due (f), and see further, post, as to the rights of the lord, §§ 845 et seq.

Primer seisin.

Primer seisin, which was a feudal burthen similar to the relief, was incident to tenants in capite, as well in socage tenure as in knight's service, and is in both cases expressly abolished by the statute.

Wardship.

743. Wardship is another incident common to the tenure in chivalry and to socage tenure; it was, however, very different in its nature in these two tenures, being in the former case an oppressive burthen, and in the latter beneficial for the infant.

Properties of guardianship.

The properties of this species of guardianship are as follow:—

Derived from tenure.

First—It springs like the one in chivalry, wholly out of tenure, therefore the title to it cannot arise, unless the infant is seised of lands or hereditaments lying in tenure, for if he be seised of a rent or common of pasture and other hereditaments not lying in tenure, then he may choose his guardian (g).

In respect of lands by descent only.

Secondly—Like guardianship in chivalry, it is deemed to take place on a descent only, and not where the infant comes in by purchase, although this was at one time doubted (h), see further Dig. P. III. tit. GUARDIAN AND INFANT.

TENURES.

744. Thirdly—The guardian must be one to whom the inheritance can by no possibility descend (i), therefore, says Lord Coke, the elder brother of the half blood shall not have the custody of the land, because he may possibly inherit (k). If there are two or more in equal degree, he who first gains possession of the heir shall have the custody of him, unless they be uncles, or lineal descendants of the infant, when the eldest will be preferred (l); but where an infant derives lands ex parte paternâ and ex parte maternâ, the next of kin on either side seizing the infant is entitled to the custody of the body (m); but the next of blood of the part of the father shall enter into the lands of the part of the mother, and vice versâ (m).

Who not to be guardian.

If the person entitled to be guardian is himself under custody of a guardian, the wardship of the first infant entitles the guardian to the custody of the second infant, and he is said to be guardian per cause de ward (n); so, an infant not in the custody of another cannot be guardian in socage, because no writ of account lies against an infant (o), see further, Dig. P. III. tit. GUARDIAN AND INFANT, so, for the same reason, an idiot, lunatic, deaf and dumb, or blind person, or a leper, cannot be a guardian (p).

Not an infant.

745. In the fourth place, a guardian in chivalry was not obliged to account to the heir, but it is otherwise with a

Duration of guardianship.	Fifthly—Wardship in chivalry continued over males until the age of twenty-one, and over females until sixteen; but wardship in socage continues only until the age of fourteen (r).
Not alienable.	Sixthly—Guardianship in socage being wholly for the benefit of the infant, and not in any respect for the guardian's profit, it is not a subject of alienation, forfeiture, or succession, as wardship in chivalry was (s).
Extent of guardian's powers.	So, guardianship in socage extends not only to the person and socage estates, but also to hereditaments not lying in tenure (t), and even to copyhold estates unless there is a special custom for a lord's appointing a guardian of them (u), but not to personalty (u).
Marriage.	746. There remain two other incidents formerly belonging to this tenure which may be briefly noticed, as they no longer exist, namely, marriage, and fines for alienation. Marriage of the ward was a source of great profit to the guardian in chivalry, but the contrary to the guardian in socage, for the latter was bound to account for the value of the marriage(x); the statute has, however, abolished this incident to tenure in both cases, so likewise fines for alienation which were common to the two tenures(y); but it is otherwise with escheats, to which lands of socage tenure are still incident.

SECTION II.

GRAND AND PETTY SERJEANTY.

§ 747. Personal Services belong to these Tenures. | § 747. Special Properties belonging to Grand Serjeanty.

748. Petty Serjeanty.
Homage Ancestrell.

§ 747. These two tenures differ from all others that have ever existed, inasmuch as the services coupled with them are personal services to be performed in relation to the person of the queen, and are purely honorary. Grand serjeanty consists in the honorary services of carrying the queen's sword or banner, of officiating as butler or carver, &c. at the coronation, or of being steward, constable, or chamberlain of England, and the like (z); so, when any held of the king by cornage, that is, by winding a horn when the Scots or any enemy came, it was grand serjeanty, but if lands were held of any lord by such tenure it was knight's service (a).

Personal services belong to these tenures.

Lord Coke says this tenure hath seven special properties: 1. To be holden of the queen only. 2. It must be done when the tenant is able, in proper person. 3. This service is certain and particular. 4. The relief due in respect of this tenure differeth from knight's service. 5. It is to be done within the realm. 6. It is subject to neither aid pur faire fils chevalier, or file marier; and 7. It payeth no escuage (b).

Special properties belonging to grand serjeanty.

As to the second property of being done in person, that necessarily admitted, and still does admit of exceptions, for in an early case it was held, that where a citizen of London held lands by the tenure of presenting a towel to the king to wash his hands at the coronation, he was admitted to perform the service by deputy, he not being of quality to perform this high and honourable service (c); and it seems that no person under the degree of a knight could be admitted(c); and as a woman cannot perform the office in person, she will be admitted to do it by deputy (c); so, in like manner, where the heir is under age, he is disqualified to perform the office in person.

The tenure of grand serjeanty is expressly retained with a reservation of all the honorary services peculiar to it, but as regards the burthensome incidents which it had in common with knight's service, it falls under the general provision by which they are abolished (d), and is made in effect free and common socage, as is said by Littleton of petty serjeanty, Litt. s. 180, and see infra, § 748.

Petty Serjeanty.

Petty serjeanty.

748. Petty serjeanty consists not in any personal service like grand serjeanty, but in rendering something annually, as a bow, a sword, and the like to the queen, which, being the same as where a man ought to pay rent, is socage in effect (e); it is probable, therefore, for this reason, that it is not expressly mentioned in the statute, but being a tenure in capite, though of the socage kind, it was liable to livery and primer seisin, from which it is relieved by the general provision relating to these burthens.

Homage aun-cestrell.

There is another tenure mentioned by Littleton under the name of Homage Auncestrell, which was where the same tenant and his ancestors held by homage of the same lord and his ancestors (f). This tenure is not expressly mentioned in the statute, but falls no doubt within the general provision which abolishes homage (g). It had in all probability expired before the statute was passed, as my Lord Coke supposes that there was little or no land held, in his day, by that tenure (h).

TENURE IN BURGAGE.

§ 749. *What is Burgage Tenure.Borough-English.*750. Force and extent of the Custom in regard to Descent.§ 751. *Special Custom.*752. Dower.Power of Disposition by Will.

§ 749. Burgage tenure is described by Glanvil and Littleton as but tenure in socage (i), where the king or other person was lord of an ancient borough in which the tenements were held by a rent certain. Such boroughs had (and still have) divers customs which are connected with this tenure, and distinguish it from the ordinary socage tenure. Such customs are known by the name of Borough-English, and they alter the law in respect of descent as well as of dower, as also as to the power of devising.

What is burgage tenure.

By the custom of Borough-English, the youngest son shall inherit to his father as to the lands of which he dies seised, either in fee simple (k) or fee tail (l), and there is no difference between the law concerning copyholds in Borough-English, and freeholds in Borough-English (m); so, if land in Borough-English be given to A. and his heirs for the life of B., and A. die in the lifetime of B., leaving two sons, the youngest shall be the special occupant, because the heir, that is, representative of the father, as to land of that nature, must be the occupant, for where custom makes an heir, the law implies all incidents in course of descents (n).

TENURES.

Force and extent of the custom in regard to descent.

750. So, it has been held, that the custom will prevail against any disposition of the ancestor, therefore, where a man seised of Borough-English lands made a feoffment to the use of himself and the heirs male of his body secundum cursum communis legis, and died leaving issue two sons, the youngest, notwithstanding the feoffment, should inherit the lands (o); but it seems to be otherwise in the case of a devise, for in a devise it is said it may be well that an estate in fee shall cease in one, and shall be transferred to another (p); so, if a man seised of Borough-English lands died leaving two sons, and the eldest entered by abatement, held, that this should not take away the entry of the youngest, because the eldest should be presumed to enter to preserve the estate in his family, which he or his heirs may some time or other happen to enjoy (q).

So, where A. had issue five sons, and the youngest died in the lifetime of the father, leaving issue a daughter, after which the father purchased lands in Borough-English, and died, held, that the daughter of the fifth son should inherit (r); so, it has been held, that the youngest son should have his whole distributive share of personal estate of his father dying intestate, without bringing into hotchpot an estate of the nature of Borough-English descended to him, for that an estate so descended is not within the Statute of Distributions (s).

Effect of special custom.

751. By special custom the general custom may be restrained or extended.

The customary descent may be restrained to lands in fee simple, and, therefore, it has been held that lands in fee tail should go to the heir at common law (t); so, also, that the descent should be to the youngest by one wife; but where a man has sons by different venters, then the eldest should inherit to his father, and not the youngest(u). So, the general custom may be extended to the collateral line, and the youngest brother shall by custom inherit(v), or the youngest sister(w).

The law takes notice of the custom of Borough-English, and, therefore, it is sufficient to allege generally the custom; but where it is a special custom extending or restraining the general custom, it must be specially pleaded(x).

752. The custom of Borough-English extends also to the law of dower; thus in some boroughs the wife shall have dower in respect of all the tenements which were her husband's(y); so, in some boroughs the wife shall have the moiety of her husband's lands so long as she lives unmarried(z); so, a custom that a wife shall have all her husband's copyholds in fee, as her free bench, is good, but it must be found precisely as it is pleaded(a); so, she shall have dower of rent, or common, for these ensue the nature of the land(b).

By the custom of Borough-English a man might dispose of his lands by will(c); although, by the general law of the land, such a disposition of a man's estate was not permitted before the reign of Hen. 8; so, by the same custom, a man might devise a rent or a common(d); but whether a rent-charge in esse, issuing out of such lands, and having commenced within time of memory, was within the custom of devising, was for some time not settled(e).

In some places the custom is general, that a man may devise any lands(f); in some places, that such lands only can be devised as the devisor purchased; in some, that he

the tenure of gavelkind.

§ 753. Gavelkind is another species of socage tenure, the properties of which are as follow :—

1. The tenant is of age at fifteen, so as to be able to alien his estate (i).

2. Gavelkind land was alienable without any licence (k).

3. In most places the tenant had the power of devising lands before the Statute of Wills (l), and the power of devising was held to remain although the lands were disgavelled by Act of Parliament (m).

4. The lands descend not to the eldest or the youngest, or to any one son only, but to all the sons together.

5. These lands are not forfeitable for felony, although they are for treason.

(g) 1 Inst. 112.(h) Litt., sect. 168.(i) 3 Atk. 24.(k) 1 Ander. 193.(l) Lauder v. Brooks, Cro. Car. 561 ; S. C., cited 2 Sid. 154.(m) Wiseman v. Cotton, 1 Lev. 80.

6. Gavelkind lands are subject to dower and curtesy, see further infra, §§ 754 et seq.; also Lamb. Peramb.; Bro. tit. Cust. 54; Somn. on Gavelk.; Robins. on Gavelk., passim.

TENURES.

754. Where an infant sells gavelkind lands, it must be for a valuable consideration, or the contract will be void (n); and this must be done by feoffment, that being the most solemn and public mode of conveyance (n), and the livery must be made by the infant in person, because an infant cannot make an attorney by the common law, and since the custom does not expressly derogate from the common law in that point, an equitable construction shall not make it derogate, for all customs are to be construed strictly (o), and as to livery of seisin, see 7 & 8 V. c. 76; Prec. Conv., Append. No. xviii. So, it must be land in possession, and not in reversion or remainder, because the true value of a reversion or remainder cannot be known or computed (p). So, it must be land coming by descent, and not by purchase, because the infant's purchase could not be the subject-matter for the custom (p). So, an infant in gavelkind should have his age (now abolished by 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 47), see Dig. P. II., COURTS (EQUITY).

Power of alienation by infants.

755. The custom of gavelkind, as to descent, extends to estates tail, and such is the force of custom, in the descent both of gavelkind and Borough-English, that even in the case of estates tail it cannot be changed by express words directing a descent secundum cursum communis legis (q); so, if a man give or devise lands in gavelkind to a man and his eldest heirs, this does not alter the customary inheritance (r), for that can only be done by Act of Parliament (r); but there is a difference between lands inheritable by descent and those taken by purchase, as if lands of the nature of gavelkind be given to B. and his heirs, having issue divers sons, all his sons after his decease shall inherit (s); but if a lease for life be made, remainder to the right heirs of B., and B. dies, his eldest son only shall inherit, because this remainder, being newly created, was not within the custom (s); but if a man seised of lands in gavelkind made a feoffment to the use of himself and his wife in tail, remainder to his right heirs, held, that this remainder shall go to the heirs by the custom, for it is the old use, and the heirs take by descent, their ancestor having a precedent estate of freehold, and not by purchase (t); so, where in a devise land is given to the customary heir, it shall go to him, although the subject of the gift is common-law land, as if one having Borough-English land, and also lands at common law, devised the latter to his heir by Borough-English, held, that this was a sufficient description of the youngest son though not heir at common law (u), and a like devise to gavelkind heirs would entitle all the sons (u).

Extends to rent.

Rent issuing out of gavelkind land shall ensue the nature of the land, and although it was at one time doubted (x), yet it seems now to be settled that there is no difference between a rent-service and a rent-charge in this case; therefore, where a rent was granted out of gavelkind land to a man and his heirs, held, that it should descend to all the sons or brothers according to the descent of the land, and not go to the heir-at-law, for the rent issues out and is part of the profits of the land.

Antiquity of the custom.

The law of gavelkind is unlike other customs, for it is not good if it begins only just before the reign of R. 1, for this custom existed long before any such customs, and almost before any history; therefore, where lands annexed to a rectory in Kent, formerly belonging to one of the suppressed monasteries, and granted by H. 8, to a layman, to be holden by knight's service in capite, were descendible according to the custom of gavelkind, held, that the tithes were according to the common law, as there could be no ancient descent with respect to them (y).

TENURES.

756. As a rule, the heir at common law may take advantage of any condition broken (z), and that too in cases where there is a special heir, whether by the custom by Borough-English or gavelkind, because a condition is a thing of new creation, and altogether collateral to the land, not being in any manner like to rent, which is part of the profits of the land, see supra, § 754; but it is said that when the eldest son has entered for the condition broken, the younger children shall enjoy the land with him, because the eldest son is in of the old estate, which is still under the control and direction of the custom (a); so, a distinction has been taken between a condition in gross and a condition incident to a reversion, for of the latter the special heir shall take advantage, although not of the former; therefore, where a man made a lease of land, parcel Borough-English and parcel at common law, with a proviso that if the lessor, his heirs or assigns, should give to the lessee a year's warning of his intention to dwell there, then the lease should be void, the lessor died leaving two sons, the eldest assigned over his part to the youngest, the question was whether the youngest was such a person as could give warning, or whether the condition was not gone by the severance of the reversion on the death of the lessor, and it was held, that the special heir might give the warning, for the law which severed the reversion severed also the condition, so that for one part as heir in Borough-English, and on the other part as assignee of his brother by the 32 H. 8, c. 34, he should take advantage of the condition; but on the other hand, where a man made a feoffment of Borough-English lands on condition, and died, having issue two sons, held, that the eldest son only should take advantage of the condition, for it was a condition in gross, and not, as in the former case, where the reversion was in the lessor (b).

Effect of a condition in a will.

Where a man seised in fee of land in gavelkind had issue two sons, and by his last will devised the land to his eldest son, on condition that he paid to the wife of the devisor 100*l.* at a certain day, and he failed in payment, the question was whether the younger brother might enter on a moiety on his brother by a limitation implied in the estate (c), but this doubt is, as Lord Coke observes, well resolved by the following determination.

A copyholder, in fee of land descendible in Borough-English, having three sons and a daughter, after a surrender to the use of his will, devised the land to his eldest son, on condition of his paying to his daughter and each of his other sons 40*s.*, within two years after his death: the eldest son was admitted and did not pay the money; the youngest son entered on the land, and his entry was held lawful, for though the word "paying," in case of a will, might make a condition, yet here the law construed it a limitation, of which the youngest son, in Borough-English, might take advantage (d).

Manner of descent.

757. The manner of descent of gavelkind lands is first to the male children and then to the female children, then to collateral relations (e); and the descent has, after the manner of the civil law, regard to the stirpes; and therefore, if the eldest son had issue a daughter, and died, his daughter should jure representationis inherit her father's share (f); otherwise the custom agrees with the common law, that a woman shall never take part of an inheritance with a man (g).

TENURES.

Where lands in gavelkind descended to the king and his brother, held, that the king should take one moiety and his brother the other, but when the king died his moiety should descend to his eldest son, and not according to the rules in gavelkind, for the king was seised of his moiety jure coronæ, therefore it shall attend the Crown, and go to his eldest son.

In the case of the queen.

By the 31 H. 8, c. 3, and six other private Acts, a great part of the lands in Kent have been disgavelled, so as to destroy their partible quality and make them descendible to the eldest son, according to the course of the common law (h); but it has been held, that these lands have lost no other of the qualities belonging to gavelkind land than their partibility (i).

758. Lands of gavelkind tenure are subject to curtesy and dower. By the custom of gavelkind, a man may be tenant by the curtesy without having any issue (k), but he is entitled to have only a moiety of the wife's land, and if he marries again it ceases (l).

Curtesy.

So, likewise, the wife, by the same custom, is to have after the death of her husband a moiety of his inheritance in gavelkind, to hold as long as she continues unmarried and chaste (m); and a woman cannot waive this dower and claim dower at common law, for where gavelkind is the lex loci, it must govern the property of that place (n), and in that case the dower must be a moiety, and not a third of the inheritance, as at common law (n).

Gavelkind lands devis-ible.

759. All gavelkind land is devisable, for being from the beginning allodial it followed the rules of the civil law, which permits any person to make his will (o); but by the express words of the Statute of Frauds, which is re-enacted by the 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 the devise of these as of other lands must be in writing.

Partition by heirs.

760. Heirs in gavelkind shall make partition as parceners, and a writ of partition lies between them as it does between parceners at common law (p), and in the declaration upon such writ the custom must be mentioned, as to say that the land is of the custom of gavelkind; but it is necessary to prescribe, for though the custom is different from the general law of the kingdom, it must be taken notice of to the judges, yet there is no necessity for prescribing, because it is lex loci (p); so, it is sufficient for any one, who will entitle himself by the custom of gavelkind, to plead that the land is in Kent, and of the nature of gavelkind, without pleading the custom generally; but if any one will plead the custom of devising, or of having a moiety as tenant by the curtesy or in dower, he must plead the custom specially, for gavelkind is the general law of the place, and not a particular custom, and the judges only take notice of the general and not of the special customs of gavelkind (q).

SECTION V.

FRANKALMOIGNE.

§ 761. Frankalmoigne excepted out of the Statute. | § 762. Spiritual Services belong to this Tenure.

§ 761. Frankalmoigne, another tenure which is excepted out of the statute 12 C. 2, c. 24, is that whereby a religious corporation aggregate or sole holds lands of the donor to them and their successors, and the service they had to perform being divine, they were not bound to do fealty (r), but if a tenant in frankalmoigne alien his land or tenement in fee, to hold of the lord by the same services as he held, the alienee, although he be an ecclesiastic, shall hold it by fealty, for he cannot hold it in frankalmoigne, because since the Statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Ed. 1, c. 1, he cannot hold it of the grantor, unless under a licence granted by virtue of the 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 8, s. 54 (s).

Frankalmoigne
excepted out of the statute.

A tenant in frankalmoigne is not only exempted from all temporal services, but the lord of whom he holds is likewise bound to acquit him of every service and fruit of tenure, which the lord paramount may demand of the land holden by this tenure (t).

762. Spiritual tenure is twofold, namely, tenure by frankalmoigne, and tenure by divine service; and the services to be performed are either spiritual, as prayers to God, or temporal, as the distribution of alms to the poor (u), as in the latter case is the office of the queen's almoner (x), which is usually given to the Archbishop of York, with the title of Lord High Almoner (y). divine service has been altered by several statutes, it is sufficient if a tenant in frankalmoigne perform such divine service as may now lawfully be performed (z).

As the divine service which ought to be performed is never ascertained by the deed on creating the tenure of frankalmoigne, no distress can be made, although it be not performed; but in default of performance, the defaulter is amenable to the ordinary or visitor, who may punish him for the same (a). But tenure by divine service differs from that of frankalmoigne in respect of the certainty of the services to be performed, and of the remedy by distress to which such tenants are liable on non-performance of the stated services. Fealty also is incident to divine service, though not to frankalmoigne. Neither of these tenures can be created by a subject at this day, in consequence of the above-mentioned statute 18 Ed. 1, and the 12 C. 2 expressly provides that frankalmoigne shall be subject to no other or greater services than it was before.

OPYHOLD, AND OTHER LIKE TENURES.

SECT. I.

§ 764. COMMON COPYHOLDS.

SECT. II.

§ 919. PRIVILEGED COPYHOLDS.

§ 763. There are three kinds of tenure of lands still existing, being excepted from the 12 C. 2, c. 24, which, from the nature of the services to be performed, were considered of base tenure, and still retain many vestiges of their original; these are tenure by copy of court-roll, or copyholds derived from pure villenage, customary freehold, and tenure in ancient demesne, which two are species of privileged villenage.

SECTION I.

COMMON COPYHOLDS.

764. This branch of the subject comprehends the following particulars entitled to notice:—

1. What is a copyhold, and the requisites thereto.

5. Estates in copyholds.

766. Copyhold not grantable in this Day.

767. Remains Copyhold after Severance, when.

§ 768. Though it may not have been always demised.

In case of Escheat.

769. Rights and Liabilities of Copyholder regulated by Custom.

What Customs shall be deemed reasonable.

Definition of a copyhold.

§ 765. A copyhold is where a man is seised of a manor, in which there is a custom that has existed time out of mind, that certain tenants within the same have used to hold lands and tenements at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, and they are called tenants by copy of court-roll, because they have no other evidence concerning their tenements than the copies of the court-roll.

What necessary to constitute a manor.

To constitute a copyhold four things are essential, viz.—
1. To be time out of mind; 2. To be parcel of a manor;
3. Demisability; and 4. Custom.

1. To be Time out of Mind.

Copyhold not grantable in this day.

766. A copyhold ought to be time out of mind, for it cannot begin at this day; therefore, if the lord grants land by copy, what has not been granted before, it is no copyhold (b), though it continues in grant for any number of years short of fifty (c), and held, that the lord, though he afterwards granted it for a further term of years, might, nevertheless, enter as upon a tenant at will (d); but a continuance in grant for upwards of fifty years without interruption was held to fix a customary interest (d).

TENURES.

2. To be Parcel of a Manor.

767. A copyhold ought to be parcel of a manor, or within a manor (e), but it is not necessary that it continue parcel, for if the lord grants the inheritance of all the copyholds within the manor, whereby they are severed from the manor, yet the copyholds remain (f); so, if the lord grants the inheritance, it remains copyhold, and shall pay rents, heriots, and other services to the feoffee, and shall be subject to forfeiture for alienation, &c. as before; but suit of court and fine upon alienation are gone, and if such copyholder will alien, there is no means but by a decree in Chancery (g).

Remains copyhold after severance, when.

3. Demisability.

768. So, a copyhold ought to be at all times demised or demiseable (h), and it must have been so time out of mind (i); and it cannot be created by operation of law, and therefore, where wastes are severed from the manor, by a grant of the latter with exception of the former, the copyhold is become freehold, though the copyholders continue to have a right of common in the waste by immemorial custom, and the land will be freehold, and not continue copyhold (i).

Copyhold must be at all times demiseable,

But it is sufficient if it be demiseable, though it have not always been demised (i); therefore, if the lord holds a copyhold, which escheats to him, in his hands for many years, he may afterwards demise it by copy (l); so, if it comes into his hands by any other means (l), and his heir or assignee may afterwards re-grant it (l); so, if a copyholder takes a lease or other estate of the manor, or of his copyhold, whereby his copyhold is destroyed, yet the land may afterwards be granted by copy, for it was always demisable (m); so, if a lord after a copyhold escheats, demises the manor and the escheated tenements by express word, yet it may afterwards be granted by copy, for it was always demisable (n); for the demise of the manor includes that copyhold as parcel of the demesnes, and the naming of it signifies nothing (n); but if the lord leaves such escheated copyhold for life or years, or conveys it for any other estate except at will, it cannot afterwards be granted by copy, for it was not always demisable (o); so, if he make a feoffment, and afterwards enters for a condition broken (p); so, if the queen, being lady, by letters-patent grants an escheated copyhold, &c., not knowing of it, it shall be the same, though she was deceived (q); so, if the land is extended upon a statute or recognizance acknowledged by the lord, or the wife of the lord has the land assigned to her for her dower, the land can never after be granted by copy (q); for although these impediments are by acts in law, yet, being lawful interruptions, the land cannot be granted any more by copy (r); sed secus if by a wrongful act it has ceased to be demisable, for when such act is avoided the land may be regranted by copy (r), as if a copyhold has been recovered by false verdict, or an erroneous judgment (r); so, if a husband, seised of a manor in right of his wife, grants by indenture an escheated copyhold, &c., the wife after his death may regrant it by copy (s); so, the same law is, if tenant for life lets a copyhold, parcel of a manor,

4. Custom.

769. Custom has been said to be the life and soul of copyhold tenure (u), for what a copyholder may or ought to do, or not to do, the custom of the manor directs (v); for although a copyholder is called a tenant at will, yet he is so secundum consuetudinem manerii, and it is held that these words were not to bound the lord's pleasure in the determination of his will, but meant only, that the tenant, as long as he continued tenant, was to hold the land under those terms and conditions which the custom had established (x).

Rights and liabilities of copyholder regulated by custom.

Customs, so far as they relate to copyholds, are either general or particular: general customs extend to all kinds of manors, they are the lex loci, of which the courts take notice (y); but particular customs, which are peculiar to some manors only, must be specially pleaded, and will be construed strictly. A custom must be immemorial (z), therefore a privilege attached to an ancient messuage cannot be claimed in respect of a tenement recently built (a); so, it must be reasonable, and if not contrary to reason may be allowed (b); so, it is sufficient to shew that it is reasonable in its commencement, and it need not be intended to have a lawful commencement by grant, &c. (c); see further as to custom and prescription, post, TITLE TO THINGS REAL.

A custom may be reasonable, though it be contrary to a rule or maxim of law, as the custom of gavelkind or Borough-English, (see ante, §§ 749, 753 et seq.) So, a custom may be reasonable, though there be a general provision by statute to the contrary, if the custom is not expressly taken away, as a custom that a tenant within the Cinque Ports shall not be in ward (d); so, a custom shall be reasonable, though the right of another be restrained, as a custom that all the inhabitants of a vill shall grind all the corn they use at the lord's mill (e); but a custom for inhabitants to grind all their grain whatsoever by them spent or sold was held to be void (f); see further as to customs, post, TITLE TO THINGS REAL; and as to the statutory provisions respecting copyholds, see Dig. P. I. II. tit. COPYHOLDS.

II. Incidents to Copyhold Tenure.

The fruits and appendages of copyhold tenure, which are all reserved by the 12 C. 2, are fealty and services, fines, reliefs and heriots, wardship and escheats.

I. Fealty and Services.

775. Apportionment of Rent.

776. Recovery of Rent by Distress.

What fealty was and is.

§ 770. Fealty, which was common to every species of tenure, except frankalmoigne, signifies the oath which was administered to every tenant of fidelity to the lord, and to do suit at his court (g); the neglect of it might be distrained for (h), which was formerly much insisted on (i), and could not be done by attorney (j), nor by an infant in person (k), but is now usually respited by a small payment, and entered as respited (l), and equity has in some instances relieved against the consequences of such neglect (m).

TENURES.

The word "service," in its largest sense, comprehends not only fealty but also heriots and reliefs, &c., but in a restricted sense is confined to suit of court and certain rents.

1. Suit at Court.

771. As to suit of court, every copyholder was and still is bound to attend the lord's court, and to perform the duties of a homager, and it seems that the lord may hold a court as frequently as he pleases, if custom has not fixed the periods (n); and if a copyholder resident within the manor does not appear nor essoign, after a general notice affixed on the church door, he may be amerced (o).

By whom suit of court ought to be done.

772. Suit of court by freehold tenants may be done by attorney, but the tenant cannot make an attorney by parol (p); copyholders cannot make suit by another, as they are not within the 20 H. 3, c. 10 (q), but if a copyholder be dwelling at a distance from the manor, a general notice of the holding the court is not sufficient to make his absence a wilful refusal or "cause of forfeiture (q)," unless he is living at an inconvenient distance, in which case notice to his bailiff is sufficient (q); so, illness, or the discharge of a great office, are good excuses of absence (q).

Suit may be done by attorney.

TENURES.
Suit by women.

Suit may be done by a feme sole or a widow in a customary court, but a woman cannot sit on the homage to try issues in a court-baron at common law, where the suitors are judges (r); so, a widow cannot make presentment unless the husband died without an heir (s).

Suit by corporations.

A corporation cannot do suit, because they can only do it by attorney, and whether a corporation can hold lands by copy of court roll is not decided (t).

Suit by joint-tenants and coparceners.

Joint-tenants and coparceners are but as one tenant to the lord, and shall therefore do but one suit (u), except where the lands are held of the queen (v); but tenants in common take several estates, and must severally do suit (w).

2. Rents.

Different kinds of rent.

773. Rents reserved by the lord are called, generally, rents of assize, because they were usually assized or reduced to a certainty, and are thus distinguished from the rents for life, years, or at will, which are variable and uncertain (x); and these were reserved equally on the grants of freehold as on those of copyhold lands (x); but those paid by freeholders are called "chief rents;" if the rent reserved was in lieu of all services, it was on that account called a quit rent (x), and being usually paid in silver was called "white rent," in distinction from that paid in specie, as in pepper, cummin, &c., which was called "black rent," see further, ante, § 154.

Loss of rent.

774. A rent originally reserved in respect of copyhold property may be lost by suffering it to be received for many years by the lord of another manor, as may happen where two manors become united in one person, and afterwards get again into the hands of different owners; thus, where the lord of the manor of D., which he purchased from B., who was formerly owner of both I. and D., brought his bill to compel payment of rent out of a copyhold held of the manor of I., though he had no other evidence to shew for it but that it had been paid to him for twenty years, the Court decreed to him the arrears, Steward v. Bridger (y); and it was there said, that in case of encroachment of rent, if the tenant makes but one payment of more than is due, he shall never go back from it (z).

TENURES.

775. The doctrine of apportionment of rents is, as a rule, applicable to copyholds; therefore, a lord seised in fee may, on a re-grant of copyholds, apportion the rent, in the same manner as in the case of freehold lands held by an ancient quit rent (a); the effect of such apportionment being a release and extinguishment of the residue of the rent as to the particular lands re-granted (b); but see as to cases where the rents can or cannot be apportioned in a re-grant of escheated copyholds, Co. Cop., s. 41, tr. 91.

Apportionment of rent.

776. The lord may distrain for rents of assize of common right (c); and by the 4 G. 2, c. 28, s. 5, all persons have the like remedy by distress for rents of assize, chief rents, and rents seck, as in case of rents reserved upon lease, and the lord may distrain the copyholder, or he may seize the land (d).

Recovery of rent by distress.

So, the lord of a manor may avow for a rent issuing out of a copyhold, for rent is a duty at the common law (e).

In Eldridge v. Knott (f), it was held, that no length of time within the period limited by the 32 H. 8, c. 2, (one of the old Statutes of Limitations, see Dig. P. III. tit. LIMITATIONS), for the recovery of customary rents, is a bar to a distress for quit rents; and mere length of time, unaccompanied with any circumstances, is not of itself a sufficient ground to presume a release or extinguishment of such a rent; and in that case it was added, that a presumption from mere length of time in support of a right, was very different from a presumption to defeat a right (g).

Copyholds not being within the 82 H. 8, c. 37, the arrears of rent for copyhold tenements cannot be recovered by executors in an action, or by distress under the provisions of that act (h). As to remedies in equity for lords of manors, see post, § 903.

§ 777. Fines payable to the lord were a burdensome incident to knight's service, which, on the abolition of this last tenure, were expressly reserved, by the 12 C. 2, to the copyhold tenure. On this subject the following points are entitled to notice, that is—

1. When and from whom the fine is due.
2. Quantity of the fine.
3. Assessment of the fine.
4. Demand, tender, or payment of the fine.
5. Recovery of the fine.

1. When and from whom the Fine is due.

778. A fine may be due either on the change of the tenant or of the lord. When the fine is due on the change of the tenant, it is immaterial whether it is by the act of God, as the death of the tenant, or by the act of the party, as by his alienation, and in this case it is said to be due without any special custom, being almost an incident to copyhold tenure(i), for this fine, when due on the death of the tenant, was of the nature of the primer seisin of knight's service before its abolition(k); and the fine on the alienation of the tenant was of precisely the same nature as the feudal burden which tenants in chivalry had been subject to before the 12 C. 2 (l).

Fine due on change of tenant or lord.
On change of tenant.

The fine due on change of the lord can only be where the change happens by the act of God, and not by the act of the party, and even in the first case it will not be due without a special custom(m); in the latter case, a custom to have a fine on any change of the lord of the manor, by alienation or demise, is against law, for by this means the tenant might be oppressed by a multitude of fines(n). But where, by the custom of a manor, any fine is due on the death of the lord, held, that the customary general fine or gressum, as distinguished from the fines payable on the

TENURES.	death or alienation of the tenant, which are called "dropping fines," was not restricted to those claiming by descent, and therefore, that the husband, tenant for life under a marriage settlement, was entitled to a fine upon the death of his wife, the last admitting lady (n).

As to the persons from whom due, in the first place, if a copyholder dies, a fine is due to the lord, on the admittance of the heir, and that, it should seem, without any special custom, see ante, § 778; and if the heir die before admittance, this shall not prejudice the lord as to his fine; therefore, the heir or devisee of such heir cannot compel admittance except upon the payment of a double fine (o); so, in case of a surrender by heir before admittance, see infra, § 780.

TENURES.

If copyholder surrenders to the use of his will and directs two trustees to make sale of his copyhold, and to apply the money to certain purposes, they may sell without being admitted, and the lord shall admit the vendee and have but one fine (v).

Vendee in case of trust for sale.

781. If a copyholder in fee surrender to one for life, remainder to another for life, remainder to another in fee, by this but one fine is due, except by special custom (w); for the admittance of the particular estate is the admittance of him in remainder (x); so, when the particular tenant and the remainder-man join in a surrender, as their interests form but one estate, one fine only is due from the surrenderee (y); but if the person to whom the remainder is limited surrender his interest to another, a fine will be due on the admittance of such surrenderee (z); so, likewise, on admittance of the heir of the remainder-man (z); and it is said, that the lord may assess one fine for the particular estate, and another for the remainder, Batmore v. Graves (a); and in the same case it was added, "If a fine be assessed for the whole, there is an end of the business; but if a fine be assessed for a particular estate only, the lord ought to have another (b)."

TENURES.

first, the Statute of Uses does not extend to copyholds (c), and as to the second, he in whom the legal estate is vested, that is, the trustee, is properly the tenant of the manor (d); therefore, if a copyhold be devised to A. for the use of B., A., and not B., is the person to be admitted and pay the fine (e); so, on the same principle, if a copyholder covenant to surrender his land to A., and, before the surrender made, A. assign his right to B., the fine will be payable on B.'s admittance, and not on the covenant to surrender, for this transferred no legal, only gave him an equitable interest in the land (g); so, no fine is payable on the assignment, grant, or devise of an equity of redemption, for on the breach of the proviso for redemption the mortgagee becomes the tenant, and is bound to pay the fine (h); so, neither can a fine be demanded of one having a mere authority, without any legal interest in the copyhold, as in the case of trustees, with power to sell, see ante, § 779; so, a guardian of an infant, having merely a right to the perannuity of the profits, shall pay no fine (i); so, if a copyholder be disseised, and enter upon the disseisor, or recover against him by plaint, he will be in of his old estate, and, consequently, no fine is due (j); or if a rightful owner of a copyhold release to one that is in by wrong, no fee will be due, he being already tenant (k).

Executors not liable.

783. It was formerly holden that the executor of a copyholder for years should have the term without any new admittance (l); it is however now settled that, whenever a term for years is limited on surrender, or created by devise, the termor will be tenant to the lord, and his executors on his death must be admitted and pay a fine, Bath (Earl) v. Abney(m); in that case it was insisted, that the executors took no new estate, and, as new tenants only, they were not liable to pay any fine, but the judge's certificate into Chancery decided otherwise.

TENURES.

Tenant in dower, or by the curtesy where the custom allows of such estates, shall, it is said, pay a fine (n); but see 1 Watk. Cop. 300, where this is disputed.

Tenant in dower or by curtesy.

784. Joint-tenants are seised per mie et per tout, therefore, if one die, the survivor shall have all without admittance or paying a fine; for when one joint-tenant dies, the other takes his share, and continues in on the original admittance (o); so, on an original surrender to two jointly, but one fine is due (p); and the same law applies to coparceners, who being as one heir are entitled to admittance on the payment of one (q); so, if joint-tenants and coparceners join in a surrender, only one fine is due on the admittance of the surrenderee (r); but as the customary heir or heirs of each coparcener must be admitted, the lord is of course entitled to fines on such respective admissions.

Joint-tenants.

Coparceners.

785. Tenants in common are to be admitted severally, and must therefore pay several fines (s), although Lord Coke in his Copyholder, s. 56, and also Kitchen on Courts, 242, lay down a different; but this is supposed in Attree v. Scott (t) to be a misprint, see also Plowd. 140; Perk., s. 107; so, the customary heirs of each must be admitted and pay several fines (u); but it is now settled, that if the several undivided shares of copyhold heretofore belonging to tenants in common become united in one person, they form one entire estate, and one fine only would become due on the admission of the surrenderee, Garland v. Jekyll (u), Holloway v. Berkeley (x), overruling Attree v. Scott (y), where it was held, that the multiplication of fines and services should continue notwithstanding such union.

Distinct fines payable on several tenements.

On the same principle as governs tenants in common, it has been held, that one fine cannot be assessed on the admission to several copyhold tenements (z).

Commissioners of bankrupt, &c.

786. When copyholds prior to the 6 G. 4, c. 16, were included in the bargain and sale from the commissioners to the assignees of a bankrupt, the admittance of the assignees was necessary, and a fine due in consequence thereof; but when the commissioners conveyed the copyholds immediately to a purchaser, a fine became due from him only (a). By the 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 56, the copyhold estates of a bankrupt become vested in the assignees, without the necessity of any admittance, and the fine in consequence becomes payable by the purchaser.

In the case of an extent.

If there be a custom for a copyholder's lands to be extended, the extendor upon his admittance shall pay the fine (b).

General and special occupancy.

787. The principle of general occupancy is not applicable to copyholds, the freehold never being out of the lord (c); but my Lord Coke says, "If a copyhold be granted durante viâ, and the grantee dieth living cestui que vie, and a stranger entereth as a general occupant, he shall be admitted and pay a fine." In the case of special occupancy, which applies to copyholds without any custom in favour of it (d), a fine is due upon the admission of the heir or other person who is special occupant (e).

TENURES.

2. Quantity of the Fine.

788. Fines payable on the change of the copyholder may be certain and defined, or arbitrary at the will of the lord (f). The fine is said to be certain, when the sum payable is fixed and ascertained by immemorial usage, in which case the lord is tied down by the custom and cannot exceed it (g); but the law will presume the fine to be uncertain until the contrary is proved, and this must be decided by the rolls of the court, in which the most ancient series of entries will be deemed true evidence of the fine, even though contradicted by a series of entries for a period of a hundred years past or more, indicating a different sort of fine (h); and a few instances of uncertain fines will be considered of no weight either way (i); a fine certain may, however, not always be a gross sum, as five or ten pounds, but it may depend upon the value of the land, as to pay for the fine such sum as the land may be worth by the year at the time of admittance, which being easily ascertained by the jury, is considered to be equally certain as a sum in gross (k); and a custom to have a year's value, generally, for a fine, has been held to be good (k).

Fine certain.

789. A fine is said to be uncertain and arbitrary when it depends upon the will and pleasure of the lord, or other person having a right to assess it. But though it is uncertain, it is not altogether arbitrary, for it ought to be reasonable, otherwise the copyholder is not compellable to pay it (l); and whether a fine be reasonable or not shall be determined by the justices upon the circumstances appearing in the case (m); and, therefore, if an action be brought against the tenant by the lord, it shall be referred to the court upon demurrer (n); or the defendant may plead not guilty, and upon proof of the land, and other evidence, the Court will decide (o); but if a copyholder prays a mitigation, it does not conclude him, but he may afterwards insist on the unreasonableness of the fine (p); the copyholder is however bound to shew, that the fine is unreasonable (q).

What is a reasonable fine, or otherwise.

790. As a rule, two years' improved value is held to be a reasonable fine on admission to copyholds of inheritance, or for lives when renewable, Halton v. Hassel (r); see also Willowes' case (s), where two years' value was deemed unreasonable, Hubbard v. Hammond (t), Jackman v. Hodgesdon (u), *Wharton v. TENURES.

791. As to the amount of fine where there is an admission of tenants for life, and persons in remainder, &c., at the same time, the tenant for life is to pay one whole fine the same as tenant in fee, and the person in remainder is usually required to pay half the amount of the fine payable by the tenant for life (g); but where there are more lives than one to take in succession, it is said, in Bath (Earl) v. Abney (h), "The fine for two lives is the sesqui of that taken for one, and the fine for three is the sesqui of that taken for two, by the usage of the manor," and this is understood to signify that "The fine for the third life is the half of that taken for the second life (i)," so, the usage in most manors on a renewal of copyholds for three lives, is to take for the first life a year and half's value, for the second life half as much as the fine for the first, and for the third life half as much as the fine for the second (k); but in Wilson v. Hoare (l) it has been held, that the proper mode of assessing a fine upon the admission of joint-tenants to a copyhold of inheritance was, to take two years' improved value for the first life, for the second life one-half the sum taken for the first, and for the third life one-half the sum taken for the second, and so on.

3. Assessment of the Fine.

792. As to the assessment of the fine, it is necessary to consider by whom it may be made, manner and place of making and entry of the assessment.

TENURES.

It belongs of common right to the lord or his steward to assess the fine (n); but a custom that a copyholder for life in extremis may nominate a successor to have the copyhold, paying a reasonable fine, to be agreed upon with the lord, or if that fail, to be assessed by the homage, has been adjudged to be a good custom (n); so, to nominate one or two as successors (o).

Several fines in case of several services.

793. If a copyholder holds several copyholds by several services, there ought to be set upon every one a several fine (p); and there is no distinction in that respect between a customary heir and a surrenderee, nor is it material whether the admission be contained in one or several copies (q); and in Snag v. Fox (r) it was held, that a surrender by a copyholder to particular uses, under which his son should be admitted in tail, would operate as a severance of the estate from any other lands left to descend to such son, so as to entitle the lord to separate fines.

One gross sum cannot be assessed on the admission to several copyhold tenements, Grant v. Astle (s); and in this case it was also held, that, being so stated in the declaration, it was error, and not cured by verdict (t).

Place of assessment.

794. In one case it was held, that a fine might not only be assessed but might be made payable out of the manor (u);

but this, which was the case of a fine for licence to alien, appears to be the only authority for such a position (v).

TENURES.

795. The entry of the assessment on the rolls is not necessary to entitle the lord to the fine, but a demand on behalf of the lord, it being a reasonable and legal fine, is sufficient (x); but if an entry be made of an assessment, it must be of the sum actually assessed, without regard to any sum remitted by the lord; therefore, where the assessment was entered as of 100*l.*, but that out of special favour the lord remitted 40*l.*, and thereby reduced it to 60*l.*, and the lord sued for the fine, and the jury finding the annual value of the premises 30*l.*, gave a verdict for 60*l.*, held, that the lord could not retain this verdict, but must be nonsuited, the Court being of opinion that the assessment, notwithstanding the remittitur, was an assessment of 100*l.*, and the latter part of the entry was nothing more than a remission of the payment of part of that assessment; and it was observed in this case that much mischief might arise to copyholders, if similar entries were permitted to be made upon the court rolls of manors (x).

Entry of the assessment on the rolls.

4. Demand, Tender, and Payment of the Fine.

796. After a regular assessment of the fine, the specified sum must be formally demanded by the lord or his steward (y); and it must be made of the specific sum, and not of any larger amount, otherwise the lord cannot recover at law (z); but if the lord demand more than he is entitled to, he may re-assess the fine, and make the demand de novo; so, it must be demanded of the person of the tenant (a). By the 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 65, re-enacting 9 G. 2, c. 29, the fine must be demanded of femes covert and infants, by the lord's bailiff or agent by note in writing, signed by the lord or his steward, and left with the infant or his guardian, or with the feme covert or her husband, or with the tenant or occupier of the copyhold.

Tender.

797. Where the fine is certain, the heir ought to tender it on his prayer to be admitted (b); and to save a forfeiture, it seems that the tender should be made at the day appointed by the lord for the payment of the fine assessed, and that a tender made at the time of the assessment is not sufficient (c); but the lord cannot refuse admittance because the fine is not tendered to him, even when the fine is certain in amount (d).

Should the fine be unreasonable, or if the copyholder has good cause for thinking it to be so, he may refuse to pay it, and it shall be no cause of forfeiture (e), but he must tender what he conceives to be due (f).

Payment of fine certain.

798. A fine certain ought to be paid immediately, but not until the tenant is actually admitted, for admittance is the cause of the fine, and, therefore, the lord cannot refuse admittance until the fine is paid (g); and if the heir choose to waive the possession, he shall pay no fine (h); but if after admittance the tenant refuse to pay, the fine having been demanded, such refusal is a forfeiture (i), see supra, § 796; and as to the provisions for the payment of fines in the case of femes covert, infants, and lunatics, see 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 65, Dig. P. II. tit. COURTS, (EQUITY).

Payment of

In some manors it is customary not to take the fine until the succeeding general court, but it seems doubtful whether a lord or steward may refuse to accept a surrender from the person admitted tenant, or to admit the surrenderee until the fine is paid (n).

800. The fine on admittance, and also the steward's fees on admittance, are payable by the purchaser (o); therefore, held, that a covenant to surrender a copyhold to a purchaser, and to do all acts and deeds, &c. for the perfect surrendering and assuring premises at the costs and charges of the vendor, is not broken by non-payment of the admission fine, for the title is perfected by the admittance of the purchaser as tenant, the fine not being due until after admittance (p).

Payable by the purchaser.

Where by the custom a remainder-man must be admitted and pay a fine, the fine is not payable until the death of the tenant for life (q); and he must come in within a reasonable time after the death, otherwise the lord may seize quousque, &c. (r); but very clear evidence is required to establish the lord's right to a full fine from a remainder-man and the Courts lean to the presumption that a fine paid by a remainder-man was an apportionment only of the full fine assessed on the admission of the tenant for life (r).

By remainder-man.

5. Recovery of the Fine.

801. If the tenant (not being a feme covert, infant, or lunatic, see supra, § 798) do not come in to be admitted and pay his fine, after the usual proclamations, the lord may, in all cases, seize the land quousque, &c.; see further as to

What is properly a relief, or otherwise.

§ 802. Relief was a feudal burden common to knight's service and socage tenure, which was payable by the heir, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate, which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant (t). The term is also sometimes applied to copyholds (u); but it is said not to be properly a relief, but an alienation fine; and this may be either by tenure, by special reservation, or by custom (x).

The remedy for a relief if it be by tenure is distress of common right (y); but, if it be by custom, there can be no distress unless there be a special custom to warrant it (z); an action of debt, however, lies in such case (z).

TENURES.

Recovery of relief.

803. A heriot is a burden peculiar to this base tenure, and it is distinguished from the relief with which it is frequently confounded in the books, in this respect, that the heriot was payable on the determination of the tenancy, but the relief on the accession of the heir (a). The heriot is the best beast or other thing, due to the lord on the death of the tenant, and is distinguished into heriot service, that is, heriot by tenure and heriot custom, which differ from each other in the manner in which they become due, or are lost or recovered, and in other particulars.

Heriot distinguished from relief.

1. Heriot Service.

804. The heriot service was originally a reservation by the lord, arising from the tenure subsisting between him and the tenant, and lies in render.

Definition of heriot service.

It is said to be due only upon the death of the tenant in fee simple (b); but it may be reserved upon the grant of any less estate, as upon a lease for life, after the death of tenant for life (c); so, if a lease be to A. for life, afterwards to B. for life, remainder to C. for life, a heriot may be reserved after the death of each of them (d); so, if a lease be for years, if two lives continue, it may be reserved after the death of each life (e); so, if tenant aliens a parcel, the heriot shall be multiplied (f), and if the lord be seised of a heriot by the alienee, the same continues, though the tenant re-purchase this parcel (f); so, heriot service thus reserved

TENURES. upon a lease is, like rent, incident to the reversion, and it shall go with the reversion to the heir, and not to the executors (g), or to the grantee of the manor (g). It is said, that the heriot being confined to personal chattels, is no charge on the land, any more than a relief or a fine on admittance to copyholds (h); but this can be said only of heriot custom (i), or where there is no express reservation, see post, § 814.

In case of a lease incident to the reversion. 805. If there be a lease for lives, rendering rent, and a heriot upon every death, and afterwards the manor is leased for years, the heriot goes with the reversion to the lessee (k);

Not due before the commencement of lease, so, if a lease be for ninety-nine years, if two lives so long continue, to commence after a death, or surrender, &c. of a former lease, reserving a heriot after the death of each life, if either dies before the lease commences, no heriot shall be paid (l); so, for the last life no heriot can be seized, or levied by distress, but only by action upon the contract, for by his death the term is determined, sed quære (m).

Recovery of heriot service. 806. Heriot service lies in render, it may, therefore, be recovered either by seizure, distress, or action.

By seizure. Heriot service, when part of the ancient tenure, may be seized, or the lord may distrain for it at his pleasure (n); and it may be seized either in or out of the manor, for the property vests in the lord immediately on the death of the tenant, and therefore he may seize the property any where, just as he may his own property (o); and for this reason it has been holden, that the lord may seize a heriot in the hands of the vendee, unless sold in market overt (p); but the lord can seize no other than the tenant's own beast (q), although he may distrain any man's beasts on the land (q); so, where, on a lease for three lives, or ninety-nine years determinable on three lives, there is reserved for a heriot upon the death of each life his or their best beast, and the lease is assigned, and then one of the lives dies, the beast of the assignee cannot be seized, though the lessor may distrain upon the land for the best beast of the deceased tenant (r).

807. If a heriot be reserved upon a lease or by deed, since the statute Quia Emptores, (under which no new tenures can be created), payable by tenant in fee, it is considered as rent, and can only be recovered like rent by distress, or action of covenant or debt, but cannot be seized (s); and the lord or lessor may distrain for a heriot the cattle of any stranger that are upon the land, and retain them until the heriot be satisfied (t); and if not replevied, the lord may now sell them under the 2 W. & M. c. 5, see Dig. P. II. tit. DISTRESS; and if the tenant brings replevin, the avowry need not shew the particular thing to which he is entitled as a heriot (t); but if the grant be lost, the lord in avowry must prescribe, which supposes a grant (u); but he need not now allege seisin in himself or his ancestor, he may avow generally under the 11 G. 2, c. 19, s. 22 (x); but the lord cannot distrain for heriot service out of the manor or lands demised (y). TENURES.

When heriot service is extinct, or otherwise.

808. Heriot service shall be extinct by unity of possession (a); so, if the lord purchase parcel of the land, because it is entire and valuable (b); sed secus as to heriot custom, for if the custom of the manor be, that upon the death of every tenant of the manor, who dies seised of any lands held of the same manor, the lord shall have a heriot; although the lord purchases part of the tenancy, yet he shall have a heriot by the custom of the manor for the residue (c).

So, if a tenant makes a settlement upon his son in marriage, it avoids the heriot, and is not fraudulent within the 13 El. c. 5, see Dig. P. II. tit. FRAUDS (d); but where a tenant, holding of several lords, makes a fraudulent gift of his beasts, any lord may sue on the 13 El. for the value of all the beasts, Cresswell v. Cokes (e), S. C., 2 Leon. 6, where it is said that he shall recover but the value of one.

2. Heriot Custom.

What is heriot custom.

Customary composition.

Heriot due on death of tenant.

In respect of several tenements.

809. A heriot may be due, by the custom of a manor, from every tenant, which is called heriot custom (f); so, there may be a customary composition in money, as ten or twenty shillings in lieu of a heriot, but a composition of this kind must be supported by immemorial usage (g); a new composition, therefore, will not be binding on either lord or tenant (g).

But the tenant must die tenant of the lord, yet it matters not whether he be tenant in fee, for life, or years (h); so, by custom, a heriot may be due upon the deaths of some tenants and not upon the deaths of others within the same manor, as the heriot is due in respect of the land (i); so, if a man dies tenant of several heriotable tenements, he shall pay several heriots (i); but, by the custom of some manors, one heriot only is due in such case (k); so, a heriot shall be due although the testator devises all his goods (l); so, as the heriot is due on the death of the tenant, or the person in legal possession, it is due on the death of the trustee, and not of the cestui que trust (m); so, it is due on the death of the reversioner, both as to freehold and copyhold estates, for he is equally in the seisin as a person in possession (n).

Of trustee.

So, it seems, that though as a rule a corporation can never die, and therefore a heriot is not due in respect of copyhold lands in their possession, yet, by special custom, a heriot may be due on the natural death or avoidance of its head (o); so, on the death of a widow entitled to her free bench, the lord is entitled to a heriot (p).

Corporation
liable, when.

Widow liable.

810. So, by custom, a heriot is due upon the determination of an estate for life (q), or upon the determination of an estate for years (q); so, by custom, it may be due upon the surrender or alienation of the tenant (r); but if the surrenderor die before the admittance of the surrenderee, it will be due on the death of the former, the latter not being the lord's tenant until admittance (s); so, if a tenant enfeoffs several parts of heriotable lands, each shall pay a heriot, for they shall be multiplied (t); so, if a tenant enfeoffs the lord of part of heriotable land, the heriot custom shall not be extinct (u); so, if land escheats, &c. and afterwards is re-granted, for heriot custom, it is said, is not extinct by unity of possession, but see ante, § 808, as to heriot service. When not due.	811. Though a custom, that the lord shall have the best beast, &c. of his tenant who dies, is good, yet a custom or
On death of stranger, &c.	prescription to have a heriot of every stranger dying within a manor is bad, because it cannot have a reasonable commencement between the lord and a stranger, though it may between the lord and his tenants (y); so, a custom or prescription to have a heriot, that is, the best beast of his tenant, and if it be eloigned before the lord seizes it, that then he may take the beast of any other person levant and couchant upon the land, is unreasonable and void (z).
Not due on the death of joint-tenants,	812. A heriot due on the death of a tenant is only where he is solely seised, and not where he is seised jointly with another, for joint-tenants being seised per mie et per tout , make altogether but one tenant to the lord, be there ever so many of them, therefore, no heriot is due until the death of or coparceners,	the last surviving tenant (a); and the rule is the same with respect to coparceners, who likewise make but one te-or tenant for life and re-remainder-man,	nant (b); so, where a grant is made of lands to one for life, with remainder to another for life, and remainder to a third in fee, the particular interest and the remainder form but one tenant, and consequently no heriot is due until the death of the survivor of them all (c). On the other hand, tenants in common being solely seised, a heriot is due to the lord on the death of each of them (d); but when their shares are reunited in the same person, they form but one tenement, and consequently only one heriot is due in respect of them (e).

TENURES.

813. A heriot is not due on the death of a person having only an interesse termini, as where a lease is made to two for ninety-nine years, if three persons should so long live, to commence at the expiration of an existing lease, at a certain rent, and rendering a heriot after the death of the lessees, or either of them, and one of the lessees die before the expiration of the first lease, a heriot could not be demanded, as there would be no reversion until the commencement of the term, and for want of a reversion the reservation could not take effect (f).

Other cases.

In Smartle v. Penhallow (g), a heriot was held not to be due on the death of an assignee of a bankrupt, but on that of the bankrupt himself.

814. If the tenant dies, having (without fraud) no beasts, then the lord shall lose his heriot (h), and the best beast must belong to the tenant at the time of the death or alienation (i); and this may apply to heriot service as well as to heriot custom, for it is said, "It is a casual thing if the lord have the heriot, unless the custom or tenure be to have the best beast, or such a sum (k);" but if the tenant had conveyed away the beasts fraudulently, then the 13 El. c. 5, has provided a remedy (k).

Loss of heriot custom.

Unity of possession does not work an extinction of a heriot custom, as it does in the case of heriot service, see ante, § 804.

815. The property in a heriot by custom vests immediately in the lord on the death of the tenant, or on an alienation by him, and it seems that it lies in prender, therefore the lord may seize it in any place either in or out of the manor (l), but he cannot distrain for it (m), for a prescription to distrain for his own goods is not good (n); he cannot, however, seize the beasts of another (o), and a custom to take the beast of another upon the land, if the heriot be eloiigned, is void (p); so, if the lord seizes the worst beast for the best, he must be content with his election, and cannot afterwards seize another (q); and if a heriot be eloiigned so that the lord cannot seize, he may have detinue or trover against him who detains it (r), or, in certain cases, assumpsit (s).

§ 818. Escheat is a term altogether of feudal import, signifying a return of the land to the original grantor or lord of the fee; an escheat, therefore, is a fruit of seignory, which is vested in the lord by inheritance, except in cases of high treason, where all lands are forfeited to the Crown; so, where the tenant is guilty of felony only, that is, felony punishable with death (g), the queen is entitled to the land for a year and a day, see further as to title by escheat, post,

III. Demise of Copyholds.

The grant of copyholds comprehends the following particulars:—

1. Who may grant copyholds.
2. How copyholds may be granted.
3. To whom grants of copyholds may be made.
4. Of what things grants may be made.
5. Construction of grants.
6. How the power of granting copyholds may be lost or suspended.

§ 819. Every lord of a manor having a lawful estate therein, whether in fee, in tail, for life, years, or at will, may make voluntary grants of such lands as come into his hands by escheat or otherwise, and such grants shall bind those who have the inheritance (h), for these grants derive their force and effect, not from the lord, but from the custom of the manor (i); if, therefore, a husband seised of a copyhold manor in right of his wife grant a copyhold, this shall bind the wife and her heirs, notwithstanding her coverture, for the copyholder is in by custom of the manor (k); but the grant must be made in the name of the husband and wife (l); so, a grant made by an infant is good (m), or an idiot, or a lunatic (n), for the law does not regard either the person of the lord, or the quantity of his estate; so, therefore, being an outlaw, or excommunicate, will not disable him to make voluntary grants, if, in the case of outlawry, between the awarding the exigent and the attainder (o); so, a guardian in socage (p); so, a grant made by a bishop, prebend, parson, is good, and in the case of a bishop will bind the queen on a vacancy of the see (q); so, if the queen consort be te-TENURES. nant for life of a manor, she may grant it by copy, and such grant by the custom of the manor shall bind the king himself, for she was domina pro tempore (r).

By lords having particular estates.

820. So, as to the quantity of his estate, though the lord has only a particular interest in the manor, he may grant by copy, and though the estate granted by him may not only continue longer than his own estate in the manor, but even though the estate granted may not come into possession during the existence of his own estate, thus tenant in dower of a copyhold may grant in reversion, and it shall bind the heir after her death (s); so, a guardian in socage may grant copyholds in reversion, and it shall bind the ward though it come not into possession during his infancy (t). Whether a lessee for years may grant copyholds in reversion, unless the reversion happen before his estate for years is ended, is not so settled (u); but the better opinion appears to be that there ought to be a custom to enable the lord to grant copyholds in reversion (v); so, on the same principle that the smallness of the lord's estate makes no difference, grants by tenant at will of a manor, and tenant by statute merchant, staple, or elegit, are good (x).

Grants, when valid.

821. But two things are necessary to the validity of such grants:—

Re-grant according to custom.

First, that there being nothing but custom to warrant a grant by copy, such custom must be strictly pursued as to the estate, customs, services, and tenure, else it is not the estate demised before (y). Therefore, although if there be a copyholder in fee, the lord may release part of the services without prejudicially affecting the copyholder's estate, as there appears in such case to be an old estate; yet, when the lord grants a new estate by copy, this being against common right, and warranted only by the custom, such custom to bind the heir must be strictly pursued (z), consequently, a person having but a particular estate in the manor cannot grant a copyhold by parcels, or demise part and retain the residue himself (a).

So, where lands have come into the hands of the lord by escheat or otherwise, the lord upon a re-grant of the same cannot diminish the ancient rent and services (b); it seems, however, that he may reserve a greater rent (c); but, as a rule, he cannot make the minutest variation in the grant, for that were to make a new copyhold (d); and it seems doubtful whether a lord may re-grant copyholds in separate parcels at apportioned rents, unless where a copyhold of six acres, which has been ever demised for 6*s.* rent, has escheated to two coparceners, and one grants three acres, reserving 3*s. pro ratâ*, which is a perfect reservation (e); see also Lord Mountjoy's case (f), also 1 Watk. on Cop. 282; but, as to the apportionment of rent, and how far it operates as an extinguishment of the customary estate, see Reay v. Huntington (g).

If lands grantable in fee escheat, the lord may grant them out again for life, this being warrantable by the custom, for the custom which enables him to grant in fee shall enable him to grant for life (h).

Upon the same principle, if a copyhold comes to the lord's hands by escheat or otherwise, and the lord makes a Grantor must be lord.

When grants are void.

822. In the next place, the person making the grant must have a lawful interest in the manor at the time; therefore, if any person having a tortious or defeasible estate of inheritance, subject to the action or entry of another, makes a voluntary grant upon escheat or forfeiture of a copyhold, such grant shall not bind him who has right, when he has recontinued the manor by action or entry (k); so, grants of copyholds by a tenant in tail after discontinuance, and by the feoffee of a man seised in right of his wife, may, after the death of the grantor, be avoided by the heir (l); so, grants made by the heir after the death of the ancestor, whereof the widow is endowed (m); so, grants made by an abator or intruder (n); so, by a tenant at sufferance (o), as by a grantee pur autre vie, continuing after the death of cestui que vie, or by a lessee for years of a manor after a breach of condition annexed to his estate, and before entry of lessor (p); sed secus upon grants made by a lessee for life on condition, after the condition broken, but previous to entry for breach of condition, as the livery of seisin necessary to perfect the grant could only be avoided by entry or claim (q); so, grants by the feoffee of an infant cannot be avoided by the entry of the infant (r).

void, even before the lord paramount has entered for a forfeiture (s); so, by a parson, (a manor being parcel of his glebe), made after institution and before induction, for as to the temporalities he is not complete parson before, though it is otherwise as to the spiritualities (s).

TENURES.

823. It is said, that if there be two joint-tenants of a manor, and a copyhold escheats, one of them may grant the entirety of this copyhold, each being seised per mie et per tout (t). Grants in other cases.

If the estate of the grantor cease the next moment, it is immaterial, if he be lord at the time; therefore, if a man seised of a manor in fee hath issue a daughter and die, his wife privement enseint with a son, the daughter may grant by copy, for she was legitima domina pro tempore; so, if the lord commit felony, and be attainted or convicted by verdict or confession, yet grants made by him after the felony committed, and exigent awarded, will be good, though by relation the manor is in such case forfeited from the time of the exigent, for in all these cases he is dominus pro tempore (u). Lord having a temporary estate.

824. A person having an authority derived from one who is lord pro tempore, or otherwise, may make grants of copyholds; therefore, if the lord of a manor, seised in fee simple, by his will direct that his executors shall grant copyhold estates according to the custom of the manor, for the payment of his debts, &c., and they make voluntary grants accordingly, these grants are good, although they have no interest whatever in the manor (x). Delegated authority.
Executors may make grants.

Grants made as well by a steward as by the lord are good, and it should seem, that if he is a steward de facto only, it will be sufficient, for the law is little inclined to examine either Grants by the steward as by the lord.

the imperfections of the steward's person as being an idiot, &c., or the unlawfulness of his authority (y); yet, even a steward de jure cannot grant copyholds in opposition to the express commands of his principal (z); neither would a grant by diminishing the ancient rents and services be good, for he is in the place of the lord (a); and although the lord afterwards become lunatic, yet he may by his steward grant copyholds (b); but although in that case it was ordered that the steward should not grant without the privity of the committee, yet it would seem that the steward's grants are sufficient (b).

Grants by the queen's steward.

825. The queen's steward is appointed by letters-patent, and such a steward ex officio, without any special warrant, may grant copyholds, and the queen shall be bound by the custom of the manor (c); yet his duty is before he makes any grant to inform the Lord Treasurer, or the Chancellor, or Barons of the Exchequer (c); but a steward retained only by the queen's auditor or receiver cannot make such voluntary grants, for neither the auditor or receiver has authority to appoint stewards (c); but if A. and B., under the seal of the Exchequer, be appointed joint stewards of all the lands of a fugitive, and A. make a court and grants copies, though in strictness he had no power without B., yet these grants are good, being made by one that had a colour to keep courts (d).

Grants by un-dersteward, &c.

826. So, may an under-steward or deputy grant by copy (d); and even such deputy may appoint another to make grants for him (e); except in the case of the queen, whose steward cannot appoint a deputy, without an express authority for

It has been much discussed whether the lord of a manor can grant copyholds out of the manor, or indeed out of court; but the better opinion appears to be that as these grants may be made by the lord or his steward, they may be made as well out of court as in (k); and the lord may make a grant out of the manor at what place he pleases (l); but not an under-steward without express authority (m); but if the court itself is void, all grants and admittances, though made by the lord himself, will be void too (n); so, where one had two manors, and granted a copyhold of the one manor at the court of the other, held, that it was a void grant, for it cannot be a copyhold according to the custom of the manor, whereof it is not parcel (o).

So, to establish the validity of all such grants, it is necessary that an entry thereof should be made on the rolls of the manor, for it is said, "If the lord in open court doth grant a copyhold land, and the steward maketh no entry thereof in the court rolls, this is not good, though it be never so publicly done, nor no collateral proof can make it good (p)."

§ 829. As a rule, all persons capable of taking grants at common law may take also by copy, and vice versa (q); but to this rule there are some exceptions arising partly from the nature of the copyhold tenure; thus, the lord cannot grant a copyhold to the use of himself, for nemo potest esse tenens et dominus (r); and when, says Lord Coke, the lord may take a copyhold to his own use, that must be understood to mean that he may take a surrender to his use (s).

831. The queen cannot be a copyholder either in her corporate or natural capacity; therefore, if a person who holds a copyhold estate becomes king, the copyhold is suspended, for it would be beneath the dignity of a king to perform services (x).

TENURES.

The queen cannot be a grantee.

It is generally supposed by text writers that a corporation either aggregate or sole cannot hold by copy of court roll, for the effect would be to deprive the lord as well of suit and service as of his fines (y); but my Lord Coke is the other way (z); and in Ranshaw v. Robotham (a) it was held, that, supposing a surrender to be made to A. to the use of a charity, it is clear that the lord would be compellable to admit A., because he would receive no prejudice thereby, as he would have his tenant in A.

Whether a corporation may be a grantee.

832. Whether an alien may be a copyholder is not so settled. It has been said that a bond-man and an alien born may be a copyholder, and neither the queen nor the lord can seize the same (b); but the better opinion seems to be that an alien could not compel the lord to admit him (c), and that the lord, not the queen, should have the advantage of any purchase of copyholds made by an alien (d), in which case it was held, that copyholders being idiots were not within the survey of the Court of Wards, but of the manor courts only; and in R. v. Holland (e) it is said to have been adjudged that, if an alien purchase copyhold lands, the king shall not have the estate but as a trust, and the particular reason was, because the king shall not be tenant to the lord of the manor (f).

TENURES.

The fore-crop, or prima tonsura.

835. Things which do not lie in tenure are not grantable by copy, and therefore things incorporeal, for which there can be no distress, and which are not parcel of the manor (this consisting only in demesnes and services) cannot be demisable by copy, for no service can be reserved or due upon the grant of incorporeal things; and as no attendance is due from the grantee, no court is necessary to be kept for surrenders, admittance, &c. (r) But a distinction has been taken between things appendant and things in gross, for things incorporeal, which are appendant to those that lie in tenure, may be granted, as a common appendant to land which is parcel of a manor, may be granted by copy without the land (s); and so common of pasture and other commons are grantable by themselves without the land (t); so, a rent-charge and rent-seck may be parcel of a manor, and, consequently, demisable (x); and also rent-service (y); so, an advowson, fair, market, piscary, being appendant to a manor,

are grantable.

836. It has been much doubted whether tithes were demisable. In Sir John Bourne's case (b) and in Hoe v. Taylor (c), it was adjudged that tithes were demisable; but in Sands v. Drury (d) this was denied to be law, and it was there held, that tithes cannot pass unless by deed, and, therefore, to grant them by copy of court roll cannot be good, and it was also said, it had been adjudged that tithes cannot be parcel of a manor; but in Musgrave v. Cave (e) this last decision was overruled, and it was held that tithes, like other incorporeal hereditaments, may be parcel of a manor, and, consequently, demisable by copy, if the custom will warrant it.

§ 837. As a rule, grants of copyholds receive the same construction as grants of freehold land do at common law, therefore a grant to one and his heirs gives a fee simple (f); so, grant of a copyhold to A. and his heirs, upon condition that he pay 100*l.*, and if he fail, then to B. and his heirs, has been held to be good, the Court considering it not so much a fee dependent upon a fee, as a use limited upon a feoffment (g); but such grants will be construed, for the most part, as they are in pursuance of the custom or otherwise, therefore, if copyhold lands have been usually granted in fee, a grant to one and the heirs of his body, or to one for life or years, is within the custom, for the lord having an authority by custom, and also an interest, the custom which enables him to grant a greater estate will enable him to grant a less, quia omne majus continet in se minus (h); so, after the death of tenant for life, the lord may grant the same again in fee, for the grant for life was not any interruption of the custom (i). So, where grants have been made for life, a grant durante viduitate is good, for that is a less estate than during her life (k); so, if there be a custom that copyholds may be granted for three lives, a copyhold may be granted to three for the lives of two within the custom, for there is no inconvenience to the lord, though it be for the life of another, for there shall not be any occupancy, but the lord shall have it, if the tenant pur autre vie die living cestui que vies, and this is not a greater estate than for three lives, which is what the custom warrants (l); so, if the lord grant by copy, to hold for the lives of two, and the longest liver of them successively, it will not give any estate to the cestui que vies (m), unless there be a special custom in favour of such construction, as in the case of Nepean v. Goddard (n), where there was a custom which gave the copyholds to the cestui que vies, in the event of the grantee dying without having disposed of the estate by will, and therefore extending the principle of general occupancy to copyholds was held to be good.

The word
"successive."

What parties may take.

838. The words sibi et suis, or sibi et assignatis, and such like, may, by custom, create an estate of inheritance (o); and so, by custom, the words "him" and "his" may create an estate for life only (p); so, a grant by the lord to the father and son, there being but one son, is good, but if more than one son, it is void for uncertainty (q).

If a copyhold be granted to three habendum successive, they are joint-tenants, unless by special custom the word successive makes the estate several (r); so, if the custom of the manor be, that the lands are demisable by copy to two or three for their lives, and the life of the survivor, habendum successive sicut nominantur in charta et non aliter, paying a heriot on the death of every one dying seised, a grant to A. and his assigns, for the lives of B. and C., and of the said A., is good within the custom (s); but if by the custom of the manor a copyhold may be granted for three lives, and it is granted to one for his life with remainder to such woman as he should marry, remainder to the first son of his body, such remainder shall be void and the estate for life only is good (t).

In the grants of copyholds the party named in the habendum only may take, for in many manors it is customary to insert the words of grant and limitation in the habendum only, and there are forms of such grants that have been held good (u).

§ 839. Although lords of manors having copyholds coming to them by escheat, forfeiture, &c. may re-grant them according to the custom of the manor, yet this power may be lost in different ways, as by changing the nature of the estate and creating a common-law interest, therefore, if the lord makes a lease for years or for life, or other estate by deed or without deed, the copyhold is destroyed (x); so, if the lord make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and afterwards enter for the condition broken, yet it cannot be granted again by copy (x); or, if the land so forfeited or escheated, before any new grant made, be extended upon a statute or recognizance (x); so, if the wife of the lord, in a writ of dower, have it assigned to her (x).

Power of granting copyholds lost by change of the estate.

But a distinction has here been taken between interruptions which are by act of law, and such as are by tortious acts, for in the former case, as in the instances above given, the interruptions being all by lawful acts, the demisable quality of the land is destroyed; but, in the latter case, where the act is unlawful, and therefore void, the demisable property is not destroyed, only suspended; therefore, if the lord be disseised, and the disseisor die seised, or if the land be recovered by the lord by a false verdict or erroneous judgment, though it be not demisable by copy until it be recovered by the rightful lord, yet, after it is come again into his possession, it is grantable again by copy (x).

TENURES.

Lords having particular estates.

840. Again, the power is totally lost only when the lease or grant is so made by a lord who is seised in fee, for if the lord, who has only a particular interest in the manor, as being tenant in tail or for life, or husband seised in right of his wife, and the like, he shall not, by making such lease or grant, prejudice the estate of him who is entitled in remainder or reversion; and therefore, though he himself shall be bound by his own act, and precluded from granting the lands again by copy during his own time, yet, upon the determination of his estate, the land will resume its demisable quality, for the custom cannot be affected to any greater extent than the estate which the person committing the act had in the land (y); so, a feoffment in fee upon condition is said not to destroy the power, although the lord afterwards enter for the condition broken (z); so, in Lee v. Boothby (a), it was held, that if the lord leased the manor, and also a copyhold, by name, it was no extinguishment of the copyhold, and the naming the copyhold was surplusage; but, if he leased a copyhold by itself, it was gone as a copyhold for ever; it was also said there, that if a lord, though but dominus pro tempore, made a lease for years of a copyhold by itself, it would destroy the copyhold; but this is at variance with French's case, &c. (b), also with Winter v. Loveday (c), where it was held, that though if a lessee of a manor makes leases of the copyholds, it will not be an extinguishment of them, yet if a lessee by virtue of a power demises, that is an absolute destruction of them, because the power is derived out of the fee, and so it is all one as though tenant in fee simple made a lease (d).

But if lands come into the hands of the lord by escheat, forfeiture, or otherwise, he may keep the lands in his own hands, or he may re-grant them at pleasure (i); and if the lord alien the manor, his alienee may re-grant the land by copy (k); so, if a copyholder accede to the manor by taking a lease thereof for years and the like, by which his copyhold is extinct, yet he may re-grant it just as the original lord might have done on an escheat, and it matters not whether the manor come to the copyholder or the copyhold to the lord, for it was always demised or demisable (l).

843. As on the grant of a copyhold, the tenant is in immediately, not by the lord, (who acts only as an instrument), but by the custom, which being prior to and paramount the interest of the granting lord, it follows, that on a re-grant of the copyhold, the grantee cannot be affected by any acts done by the lord whilst the lands remained in his hands, which, in the case of freehold lands, might operate as a charge or incumbrance on the land; therefore, if, after the escheat of a copyhold, the lord grant a rent-charge or acknowledge a statute, and then re-grant the land to be holden by copy, such rent-charge or statute will be no charge upon the copyhold (m); and, in like case, it has been decided, that the grantee will hold discharged of the dower of the wife of the lord (n), but see contrà as to a rent, Walton's case (o), Sands and Hempston, &c. (p); and in Sammer and Force (q) it is said, if a copyholder be of twenty acres, and the lord grants rent out of those twenty acres in the tenure and occupation of the said copyholder, (and names him), then if this copyhold escheat and be granted again, the copyholder shall hold it charged, for this is now charged by express words.

Upon the same principle, if the lord grant the freehold of the lands of his copyholder to a stranger (r), or lease them for years to a stranger (s), this will not extinguish or determine the copyhold estate, for custom has so established the copyholder's estate, he is not removable at the lord's will so long as he performs his customs and services (t).

TENURES.

Interest of the lord in the lands granted to the tenants.

The freehold is in the lord.

846. As to the estate which the lord has in those portions of the manor which have been granted to his tenants, this is very different. A tenant by copy of court-roll is still described as a tenant at will, although he may possess an estate in fee simple, in fee tail, for life, by the curtesy, and other estates similar to those which may be had in freehold lands at common law; and the freehold, on the other hand, is considered to reside in the lord only, and to many intents it continues so to do, particularly as regards the lord's right of escheat and forfeiture, but the tenant does not hold at the arbitrary will of the lord, for he holds also according to the custom of the manor, and a tenant is not removable at the lord's will, so long as he performs his customs and services (u).

estates.

847. Custom directs everything relating to the estates of the copyholder, as it does in respect to copyholds generally; and as customs vary not only from the common law but also from each other in different manors, the incidents of copyhold estates differ from similar estates at common law in many particulars, which will be treated of under the head of CUSTOMARY ESTATES, see post; and as to the modes of transferring such interests under title by customary alienation, see post, TITLE TO THINGS REAL.

Tenant's interest in the rolls of the court.

848. Tenant by copy of court-roll has an interest in the rolls of the court as well as the lord, and the lord cannot deny copyholders access to them (x); and the steward has been ordered, on several occasions, to produce the rolls (y).

But besides the rights and interests already mentioned, there are three things in which the lord and tenant have an interest in common, though in different degrees, namely, in trees, mines, and commons, which demand here a particular

TENURES.

1. Rights in Trees.

849. A copyholder has the same customary or possessory interest in the trees as he has in the land (x), for custom has fixed it to his estate against the lord, for the copyholder has as great an interest in the timber trees as he hath in the messuage which he holdeth by copy (a); but a copyholder may not cut down trees, or do any other injury to the freehold, without the lord's licence; therefore, a custom that a copyholder for life may cut down and sell timber trees at pleasure is void (b); although, by special custom, a copyholder of inheritance may cut down trees, for he has a quasi inheritance in the copyholds, and so he hath in the trees (c), yet, without a special custom, no copyholder can commit waste (d); so, in the absence of custom, it has been held, that a copyholder cannot cut down trees (e).

Possessory right is in the tenant.

Tenant's interest in the underwood, &c.

850. It is however a good custom that copyholders in fee shall have the loppings of pollingers, and the lord cannot cut them down, for that would deprive the copyholder of the future loppings (f); and a copyholder may maintain trespass against the lord, quare clausum fregit et arborem suam &c. succidit, because of the interest which the copyholder has in the trees, see supra, § 849; so, it was the unanimous decision of the Court, in Ashmond, or Ashmead, v. Ranger (g), that trespass would lie by the copyholder for life against the lord, for cutting trees on the estate, and not leaving sufficient for repairs, the custom being that every copyholder for life shall have timber trees, &c., for the reparation of the premises; and this decision was affirmed in error in the Exchequer Chamber, but both the judgments were reversed in Dom. Proc., ten Lords being for the affirming, and eleven for the reversal, and it was there said, the tenant could not cut the trees, and if the lord could not, then nobody could, and they must rot on the land; as to the tenant's right to estovers, see post, § 851.

Tenant's interest in the shade, &c. of trees.

The tenant's interest in the trees is not confined to the use of them for repairs, &c., or domestic purposes, for he has an interest in the fruit and shade, &c. (h); and so, if birds build nests in the trees, the eggs are the tenant's, and this, it is said, shews that he has a possessory interest in the trees, though his estate be but for years (i).

The tenant has also such an interest in the trees that he may maintain an action on the case against a stranger for cutting down trees, and so may the lord for the same trespass done to the inheritance (k).

Tenant has no right to sell wood, when.

851. When the custom is to have wood for repairs or other necessary uses, the right to sell any part of it will not be supported by anything but the clearest evidence of usage; therefore, where the tenants covenanted with the lord that they would not cut down, sell, or dispose of any wood without the licence of the lord, held, in an action against a tenant for cutting down and selling wood, that evidence, that the tenants of defendant's estate had, for thirty years and upwards, publicly, and without interruption from the lord, and with his knowledge, cut and sold the planted wood on the estate, in large quantities, was admissible, but not evi-

Lord's right to the trees when severed from the soil.

2. Rights in Mines.

853. In the absence of any special custom, the copyhold tenant has a possessory interest in the mines, and, by custom, he may have not only a right of possession, but also a right of property in the same. The lord, on the other hand, has the right of property, but, without a special custom, he has no right to enter upon the lands of the copyhold tenants to search for and obtain the minerals, unless he has previously had their consent, and thus it is laid down in a book of authority:—"It seems to me that a copyholder of inheritance cannot, without a special custom, dig for mines, neither can the lord dig in the copyholder's lands, for the great prejudice he would do to the copyhold estate; and the copyholder himself seems to have no interest in the inheritance (t)."

854. It seems also now to be settled, that if the lord enter upon the copyhold tenant's lands to dig for mines without his consent, the latter may have his remedy against him as a trespasser. This last point was however disputed in one case, although the Court inclined to the opinion that such an entry by the lord would be a trespass (u). In a prior case, where the lord granted all coal-mines within a manor (parcel of which was copyhold for life) to J. S., after which he entered the copyhold land, and dug a new pit therein during the life of the copyholder, and took the coals, held, that the lessee might have his action against the lessor, for neither the lessee nor the lessor could enter upon the copyhold to dig the coals, for the copyholder should have trespass for breaking his close, and digging his coals (v); so, in a subsequent case, the Lord Chancellor held, that if there were no custom to regulate it, neither a customary tenant without licence from the lord, nor the lord without the consent of the tenant, could open and work new mines (x). In Bourne v. Taylor (y), where all the above-mentioned cases (see supra, § 853) are cited and commented upon, it was expressly held, that the lord of a manor, as such, has no right, without a custom, to enter upon the copyholds within his manor, under which there are mines and veins of coal, in order to bore for and work the same, and the copyholder may maintain trespass against him for so doing; and, lastly, it is said in Grey v. Northumberland (Duke) (z), "From that case, (viz. Bourne v. Taylor, sup.), I collect that the lord of a manor may be in the same situation with respect to mines as in respect to trees; that is, the property may be in him; but it does not follow that he can enter and take it, without consent, which must be acquired by purchase or otherwise (a)."

855. The possessory right of the tenant extends so far that the possession is in him, from the surface down to the centre of the earth, according to the general rule, that he who has the surface has the subsoil, and he may recover substantial damages for any actual injury done to the surface; therefore it was held, that trespass was maintainable by a copyholder against the owner of an adjoining colliery, for breaking and entering the subsoil and taking coal therein, although no trespass was committed on the surface, Lewis v. Branthwaite(b); and it was also said in this case, "Although the property in the mine may be in the lord, he has not such a possessory right as to maintain trespass against a wrongdoer(c)."¹ But as to the right to take the minerals, it appears that a copyholder may acquire a right to certain minerals by custom, as to dig marl, clay, &c. for repair, in the same manner as he acquires a right to cut down trees, see ante, §§ 849 et seq.(d); yet, although a distinct positive usage for the customary tenant to take the minerals might be valid in law, it is incumbent on the tenant to prove the custom, otherwise the right will remain in the lord(e); so, although a tenant might do one sort of waste, as to cut down timber, that was no evidence that he could commit another kind of waste, as that of disposing of minerals(f). The interest of the lord, on the other hand, is not derived from custom, but is that which he has at common law, or which is reserved to him out of his original grant(g).

tels to the owner, whose right of possession has accrued, see ante, § 25 (h); and so, where the lord himself granted all the coals within the manor for a term, and afterwards entered upon the copyhold and dug for coals, it was held, that the lessee might recover those that were so dug (i).

How the lord may lose his right to the minerals.

857. Mines are a part of the demesnes of a manor, and not a distinct property from the freehold; therefore, if it is intended to except them from the grant of any waste on the enfranchisement of copyholds, the right must be reserved in expressed terms; thus, where, by the terms of an inclosure act, a certain portion of the wastes of the manor was allotted to the lord in lieu of his right and interest in the soil, and the residue was to be allotted to the several tenants in fee, discharged from all customary tenures, rents, fines, &c., a saving clause, reserving all seigniories incident to the manor, and all rents, fines, services, &c., and all other royalties and manorial jurisdictions whatsoever, will not reserve mines under those allotments to the tenants (k); although it appeared by a lease that was unexpired at the time of passing the act, that the right of digging for the mines had been exercised by the lord of the manor (h), it being held, that the mines are part of the soil, and passed by that word in the allotments to the several proprietors, and that under the saving clause nothing was reserved to the lord but rights of an incorporeal nature, which are quite distinct from the soil (h).

3. Right of Common.

Prima facie

How restricted.

scription to have the sole right of pasture to the exclusion of the lord has been established(l); for, notwithstanding this prescription for the sole pasture, yet the soil is the lord's, and he has mines, trees, bushes, &c., and he may dig for turves(m); and it is said, that such a grant, that is, of the sole pasturage, would be good at this day(m); so, a lord might grant to his tenants to have common, excluding himself, but such a common is not good by prescription(m); so, though the lord may establish his general right to all tin mines within the manor, yet consistently therewith the tenants of certain tenements in a vill within the manor, some of them freehold, and some customary, may by acts of ownership for more than twenty years, establish their right to copper mines, as well under the waste and customary lands as under the freehold lands(n).

859. "The lord by granting rights of common on his waste does not thereby exclude himself or his tenants from all use of the waste on which the right of common is to be exercised, but merely grants to others, in common with himself and his tenants, certain rights upon that waste; all that the lord has not granted remains in him. He may, therefore, apply the waste to any purposes not inconsistent with the rights which he has previously granted to the commoners(o);" but an unlimited and unrestricted right to abridge the rights of the commoners, and to confer in severalty upon any person, from time to time, such portions of the waste as the lord in his discretion should think fit, has been held to be utterly inconsistent with an existing right of common, and as tending to annihilate the rights of the commoners altogether,

Woodhouse* (s), where a custom, that when certain particular portions of land, which had been destined for turbary, ceased to have the power of producing turbary, the owner of the waste should be at liberty to take that portion to himself, was held good; because the owner in that case took nothing from the commoners which had been originally appropriated to them for purposes of pasture (s); also from *Folkard v. Copyholders may claim right of common by custom only.

860. A copyholder can claim right of common by custom only, for he has common by reason of the custom, which annexes the same to his customary estates, and therefore if a copyholder purchase the freehold of his copyhold estate, his right of common is destroyed (x); and where copyholders claim common on the several pasture in the lord's soil, it is not necessary to shew what estate they have in their copyholds, for be their several estates either in fee, or for life, or for years, yet the custom hath annexed this sole pasture as a profit à prendre to their estates for the time being (y); so, therefore, where a man stated himself to be a customary tenant of a manor, according to the custom of the manor, of lands which were parcel of the manor, and holden by copy of the court-rolls, it was held sufficient to support his claim to common, without adding that he was tenant "at the will of the lord (z);" but it is otherwise with respect to any tenants of freehold estates at common law, for if they claim any such benefit, they must shew their estates, and prescribe in the name of the tenant in the fee by a que estate (z); copyholders, however, cannot as a rule claim common by prescription, for they cannot prescribe at all against their lord, nor against any other, but only in the name of their lord (z); see further as to prescription by copyholders, under TITLE TO THINGS REAL.

A claim of common by a copyholder, to be good, must be both certain and reasonable (a). It is a good custom for a copyholder to have the loppings of the trees, and that on that account the trees should not be cut down by the lord, because the tenant has a future as well as present interest in the trees (b); so, a copyholder may claim estover, and a custom to cut down wood for repairs or other necessary uses is good (c); but such a custom will not warrant the sale of the wood (c), unless sold to defray charges of reparation (d); so, a custom to dig for limestone, marl, clay, and gravel, for the same purposes (e); but in that case it is necessary to allege not only that the house was out of repair, but that the party entered for the purpose of getting materials for the necessary repairs of the house, and that they were used for that purpose (f); so, a custom for a copyholder to have turbary sufficient for the house to which it is appendant is good (g), or to dig for materials for the

861. There are some other rights to which the lord of the manor may be sometimes entitled, namely, a right to appoint a guardian, and a right to the custody of lunatics, or to the lands of an alien. The first of these, as before observed, is not of common right, see ante, § 817; and as to the second, it is not settled whether the lord has any power over the land of a lunatic, except by custom; therefore, where the lord had granted the custody of a lunatic's copyhold land, the Court held, that an action touching the land was to be brought in the name of the lunatic, for that no interest was gained in the land by the committee, he being no more than a bailiff, Cocks v. Darson (l); and it was there said, that the lord had no power over the lunatic's land without a custom, for the imitation of the king's power over freeholds was not a consequence, for although the 17 E. 2 (Stat. Prerog.) was but an affirmance of the common law in the case of the king, yet the collateral incidents of estates, as dower, curtesy, wardship, and the like, were not without special custom (l); but in Beverley's case (m) it is said that the king shall not have the custody of the land which an idiot holds by copy, for that is but an estate at will by the common law, it would be a great prejudice to the lord of the manor; yet, held in another case, that an alienation made by an idiot after office found should be avoided (n); an idiot, however, could not be ordered in the Court of Wards for his copyhold, it being the rule that if an idiot had not any goods or chattels, or lands, except copyhold lands holden of a common person, the king should not have the custody, but the lord of whom the copyhold is holden; but if he had any other lands, then the copyhold land also (o); and so, where a copyholder was mutus et surdus, it was held, that the lord, and not the king, should have the custody, for otherwise the lord should be prejudiced in his rents and services (p).

862. In the case of copyhold lands purchased by an alien, as he cannot retain them, it seems not to be settled whether the queen or the lord may take advantage of the purchase, but the better opinion appears to be that the queen cannot take them except as a trust (q); see further, ante, § 832; and as to the copyholder's power to grant leases, see post, § 1399.

§ 864. A copyhold is said to be extinguished when the freehold and copyhold interest unite in the same person and in the same right, which may be either by the copyhold interest coming to the freehold, or by the freehold interest coming to the copyhold (r).

Copyhold coming to the freehold.

The copyhold may come to the freehold if the copyholder conveys his interest to the lord, whether by surrender or release, or bargain and sale (s); so, if the lord sell the freehold of inheritance of the copyhold to another, and then the copyholder release to the purchaser, this will extinguish the copyhold, for although a release could not in its own nature [according to the old law (t)] pass away a possession, yet it might amount to a signification of the tenant's mind (u); and a copyholder being but a tenant at will, anything amounting to a determination of the copyholder's will is sufficient to extinguish the copyhold, as if a copyholder comes into court and says that he is weary of his copyhold, and requests the lord to take it, that is a surrender (x); and in one case it was held, that a copyholder accepting his land to hold of the lord by bill, under his hands, instead of by copy, determined the copyhold interest (y); so, if the copyholder surrender to the use of the lord, (even though the lord be a disseisor), it was much questioned whether this were an extinguishment or not, Moor v. Pit (z); but the Court of C. P. was of opinion in this case, that it was a void surrender, and the copyhold not extinguished (a), and this judgment was affirmed in error (b).

So, if lands escheat or are forfeited to the lord, it is an extinguishment of the copyhold interest (c).

Although the lord may determine his estate by any act, yet the lord cannot destroy the estate of the copyholder by any act of his, as by the severance of the freehold of the land held by copy, for the custom has established his estate, so that the lord cannot oust him, so long as he pays and performs his customs and services (d).

865. A copyhold interest may also be extinguished by the annexation of the freehold to the copyhold; thus, if a copyholder in fee accept a lease for years of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate (e); so, if the lord lease the copyhold to another, and the copyholder accept an assignment from the lessee (f). If a copyholder take a conveyance of the manor in joint-tenancy, it appears that the copyhold interest will be extinguished, for joint-tenants are seised per mie et per tout (g); so, if a manor be leased for years, and a copyholder purchase the reversion in fee, by this the copyhold is destroyed, and the lessee of the manor may oust the copyholder, and hold the land during his term (g); so, if he accept a lease for years of the manor, it is said by some, that this is a total extinguishment of the copyhold, and the lessee may re-grant the copyhold again to whom he pleases (h); but, according to others, it is only a suspension of his copyhold during the term (i); so, if the copyholder join with the lord in a feoffment of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinct (j); so, if the copyholder sue execution upon a statute, and has the manor in execution, it is said that the copyhold is gone (k), for after the debt levied, the customary interests remains (l); and if the lord enfeoffs his copyholder to the use of another, his copyhold is not destroyed, for it is saved by the Stat. of Uses (m); so, if there be a copyhold for three lives, habend' successive, and the lord by deed grants the inheritance to the first, the interest of the second is not destroyed (n); so, if the lord grants the freehold of a copyholder to a stranger for the life of the copyholder, his copyhold is not destroyed (o).

and a conveyance of a portion of the freehold by the lord to the tenant, for the former operates as an extinguishment of the part only conveyed to the lord, and the latter as an extinguishment of the whole tenancy(p); therefore, if a copyholder in fee surrender to the use of the lord for life, with remainder over to a stranger, or reserving the reversion to himself, it will be an extinguishment only of the estate so limited to the lord, but will not affect the remainder or reversion(q); but, if a copyholder in fee accept a common-law lease of his copyhold tenement from the lord or his grantee, the whole copyhold interest will be extinguished(r).

867. So long as the demisable quality of the estate subsists, the copyhold is not extinct; therefore, where copyholds come into the lord's hands by forfeiture or escheat, &c., he may re-grant them by the custom of the manor(s); but, if he make a common-law lease, for life, or years, or any other certain time, the copyhold is destroyed, because, during those estates it was neither demised nor demisable by copy(t); but, if the lord keeps it in his hands, or only lets it at will, he, his heirs or assigns, may well re-grant it at his pleasure(u).

Suspension or
ment.

868. To cause a complete extinguishment of the copyhold estate by unity of possession, they must be united in the same person; therefore, if one seised of a manor in right of his wife, let lands by indenture for years, this does not destroy the custom as to the feme, it only suspends it, for after the death of the husband she may demise it by copy again(x); but in one case it was held, that where copyholder in fee married a seignioress, and they suffered a common recovery to the use of themselves for life, remainder over, it operated as an extinguishment, because the husband gained a freehold(y); so, on the same principle, if a person having a limited interest only in a manor, as tenant for life, lets a copyhold parcel of the manor for years, the demisable quality of the land is not destroyed, but only suspended as to him during his life, and after his death, or the determination of the particular estate, the remainderman or reversioner may re-grant by copy(z).

Unity of possession in the same person in the same or different rights.

869. Again, to cause a total extinguishment of the copyhold, there must be unity of possession in the same person in the same right, but where the interest is united in the same person in different rights, there the copyhold interest will be suspended only and not extinguished; therefore, if a copyholder in his own right become seised of the manor, or of the freehold interest in his copyhold tenement, in right of another only, or vice versa, the copyhold interest will be suspended during the union of such interests, Lane's case (a); see also Gage v. Acton (b), where this doctrine is applied to common-law interests.

Consequences of the extinguishment.

Copyhold lands pass with the manor, when.

870. Copyhold premises which become extinct by the union of the copyhold and freehold will enure to the benefit of either a devisee or a mortgagee; held, therefore, that under a devise of a manor, copyhold premises parcel thereof, which were purchased by and surrendered to the lord subsequent to the making of the will, will pass, and this, notwithstanding a subsequent demise from year to year by the deviser, for, notwithstanding the purchase of the copyhold by the lord, it still remained parcel of the manor(c); so, where a lord mortgaged the manor in fee, and afterwards purchased copyholds held of the manor, it had been pre-vously decided that they should enure to the benefit of the mortgagee (d); so, where copyhold premises are purchased by the lord, tenant for life of the manor, with remainder over, they will, if not re-granted, merge in the inheritance of the manor, for the benefit of the remainder-man (e); so, likewise, for the benefit of an executory devisee (f); but where there was a union of a fee of a customary freehold with the estate for life of the lord of the manor, that was held to suspend the seigniorship during the lord's life, and that at his death the seigniorship revived, and the fee of the customary tenements descended to his heir, Bingham v. Woodgate (g). In this case it is said, "that, if the lord had been seised of the fee of the manor, then the union would have extinguished the customary tenements, but extinguishment takes place only when the two estates have the same duration (h)."

Merger.

871. It seems to be settled, that the customs of freebench, curtesy, &c. will cease with the extinguishment of the copyhold tenure, by any union of the freehold and copyhold interests (i); but with regard to common it is otherwise, for that is extinguished only in particular cases.

Extinguishment of the incidents to the copyhold, or otherwise.

If, by custom, all the copyholders for life have common in the waste of the lord, and the lord grant to one and his heirs all his copyhold messuage and land cum pertinentiis, he shall not have common, for by the custom the common was annexed to the customary estate, which being destroyed by his own act in making it a freehold, his common is destroyed with it (k); sed secus, if he have common in the soil of a stranger, see further, post, § 899. § 872. The law of forfeiture as regards copyholds is in many respects different from that which regards lands of socage tenure; as to—

1. The causes of forfeiture.
2. Persons subject to the forfeiture.
3. Who may take advantage of a forfeiture.
4. Extent of a forfeiture, and its consequences.

1. The Causes of Forfeiture.

The principal causes of forfeiture are as follow:—For treason or felony, alienation, waste, inclosure, and denying services.

873. If a copyholder commits treason, his estate is forfeited to the lord, not to the queen, except by the express words of an Act of Parliament (n); so, if a copyholder commits felony, his estate is forfeited to the lord by custom (o); and a custom, that if a copyholder commits felony, upon presentment of the homage the lord shall enter, is good (p); but there cannot be a forfeiture of copyhold by conviction before attainder, unless there be a special custom in the manor to the contrary, R. v. Willes (q), recognizing Stevens's case (r), and Lord Cornwallis's case (s), in the former of which cases it was held, that there could be no forfeiture before attainder, and in the latter, no seizure before attainder, without a custom (t); so, if convicted of manslaughter, he does not forfeit without a special custom (u); so, not for outlawry, unless it be for a capital crime (x).

TENURES.
Forfeiture for alienation.

874. If a copyholder makes an alienation by deed, it is a forfeiture by the general law of copyholds (y), as a charter of feoffment (z); and it is said, that if a letter of attorney be given to make livery, it will be a forfeiture, although no livery be made (a). So, as a release grounded on a bargain and sale for a year, and also a bargain and sale inrolled, pass only the interest which the releasor and bargainor may lawfully transfer, they have been held to be no forfeiture of the copyhold of which advantage can be taken (b); so, if a copyholder for life makes a surrender to the use of another in fee, this is no cause of forfeiture (c), because a surrender, like a bargain and sale, passes no more than what the surrenderor may lawfully convey (c).

By making leases.

875. A lease for one year only by a copyholder is no forfeiture, being warranted by the general custom of the realm (d), and the lessee may maintain ejectment (d); and see also 9 Co. 75 b; 1 Cro. El. 224, 394; Cro. Jac. 403; 1 Leon. 328; Poph. 188; Ow. 18; Litt. Rep. 223; Helt. 126; Anders. 192; Moor, 272; where it appears that it was once doubted whether to warrant a lease even for one year a special custom was not necessary. If a copyholder takes upon him to make leases, not warranted by the custom of the manor, and without the lord's licence, this is a forfeiture of his copyhold, but it is no disseisin to the lord, for the lease is good against every one but the lord (e); and it is immaterial whether such lease be by parol or in writing (f); but a lease to amount to a forfeiture must be a perfect lease, having a certain beginning and a certain end, otherwise it is void, and carries but an estate at will at most, which is no forfeiture (g); so, if the words of a lease were doubtful, so that they might be construed into a covenant, the Court, to prevent a forfeiture, would take it to be a covenant (h); but where A., a copyholder for life, having got B. to be bound with him in 100*l.*, gave him a deed, in which he covenanted that B. should enjoy the lands for seven years, and so from seven years to seven years, during the term of forty-nine years, if A. should so long live, held, that these words were so clear and plain, that they amounted to a lease, and, consequently, created a forfeiture (h); on the other hand, where a copyholder, by articles of agreement, covenanted with another that he should hold for a year at halves, according to the custom of the manor, held, that these words so tied up the lease, that if there were no custom to warrant this manner of leasing, the lease itself fell to the ground, besides that there was a further clause, that if the lessor put out the lessee, he should be allowed so much rent by way of retainer, making it therefore uncertain whether he should enjoy the lease during the whole of the term; so that upon the whole construction this was held to be a covenant, not a lease, and adjudged to be no forfeiture (i); see also Hare v. Celey (k), where exposing to half was held to be no lease, it is only a liberty to plough and sow.

To prevent forfeiture, and yet enable the copyholder to grant a larger interest than what the custom warranted, various devices have been resorted to, but for the most part with little success; thus, where a copyholder for life made a lease for a year by indenture dated such a day, and the same day, by another indenture made a second lease to the same party for a year, to commence such a day, being two days after the expiration of the first lease, and by other indentures made other leases, leaving between each lease two days, it was agreed that whether the custom of the manor, or the general custom of the realm, allows a copyholder to make a lease for a year; this ought to be a lease in possession, and he cannot, after such a lease made, make another in reversion; and these three leases being made all at one time, shall be intended one entire contract, and so a lease for three years, which is more than the custom warrants, and, consequently, a forfeiture (l); and the intervention of the two days between two days was held to be fraud and covin, to defeat the lord of his forfeiture, which should not avail (l); and so, where a copyholder made a lease for one year, and covenanted with the lessee that he should enjoy the land de anno in annum for ten years, this is clearly a good lease for ten years, and will make a forfeiture (m); and so a lease for one year only, saving the last day, and sic de anno in annum, is a forfeiture, for, at the least, this is a lease for two years, and might be for twenty, or what other time he thought fit, which the law will not permit (n).

Cases where no forfeiture.

876. But in some cases parties have succeeded in avoiding a forfeiture, as where a lease was made by a copyholder for a year, with a covenant to renew yearly for ten years, which has been adjudged to be no forfeiture, because the lessee had, in that case, no lawful estate but for one year (o); so, where it was only an agreement for a lease, not amounting to a present demise, and there was a clause for procuring the licence of the lord, held, that this was no forfeiture (p); so, where a copyholder demised for one year, and after from year to year for thirteen years more, "if the lord would licence the same, and so as the same should not be liable to forfeiture," adjudged, that it was not a lease for fourteen years, and an ejectment would lie after the expiration of the first year (q); see also Luffkin v. Nunn (r), where it was held, that if the tenant be evicted by such ejectment, no action can be maintained on the covenant for quiet enjoyment (s); so, on a demise of freehold and copyhold lands at one entire rent, habendum as to the copyhold for three years, warranted by the custom, with a covenant for renewal of the copyhold every three years, and that in the meantime and until such new lease should be executed, the lessee should hold the land, copyhold as well as freehold, according to the terms of the lease, adjudged to be a lease for three years only (t), and it was there said, "Lady Montague's case (u) is in point, and the defendant's remedy lies on the covenant, for the Court cannot, by construction, in order to avoid circuity of action, make words which import only a covenant a lease inconsistent with the nature of the estate (v)."

877. Waste is either voluntary or permissive. Voluntary waste is a forfeiture by the common law, see post, under TITLE TO THINGS REAL; but negligent waste is said not to be so without a custom (x); the authorities, however, are the other way, for my Lord Coke says, if there be no custom to the contrary, waste, either permissive or voluntary, of a copyholder is a forfeiture of his copyhold (y). If a copyholder cuts down trees for repairs, and does not repair, it is a forfeiture (z); so, if he employ them for repair of other tenements, it will be a forfeiture (a); so, if he does anything to change the nature of the estate (b), as to pull down a house newly built upon the copyhold (b), or build a new house, (sed quare, see infra, § 878), or turn arable land into a hop ground, sed quare, see infra, § 878; so, if he opens a new stone quarry, it is a forfeiture (c), (see ante, § 853, as to the copyholder's interest in minerals); so, if he grubbs up hedges and destroys boundaries (c); so, if he tops timber trees and makes them pollards (d).

Exceptions to the law of waste.

878. If a copyholder cuts down timber for repairs, it is not waste, for he may do so without a special custom (e); so, though he cuts down more than he wants for immediate use, provided he keeps the residue for future use, for he may not know precisely how much is necessary (e); and so adjudged, although the timber was not employed for five years, nor until after an entry for a forfeiture (e); and it is a question for the jury to decide whether the trees were cut bond fide for repair, and were in a course of application for that purpose (f).

So, where a copyholder may take trees for reparation, the loppings and tops belong to him, and he may sell them to help to defray the charges (g); see ante, as to the copyholder's interest in trees, § 848 et seq.

Whether turning ploughed lands to hop ground, or to a piscary, is waste, is not settled, but the better opinion is, that as a rule, whatever change will better the land, it will not be a forfeiture (h); so, as to the copyholder building a new house upon the copyhold, it is said by some to be a forfeiture, because it alters the nature of the thing (h); but,

by others, not a forfeiture, because it is for the melioration of the land (i); but then the house must be subject to all the customs of copyhold land, and if the copyholder pull it down again, it is waste and a forfeiture (i); so, if a copyholder digs a marl pit, and marls his land, it is not a forfeiture, because it betters the land, although at common law it is said to be a forfeiture (k); so, it is no forfeiture, if a copyholder of inheritance, who by custom may cut timber, does waste (l).

879. Inclosing copyhold lands one from another is a forfeiture, so also destroying land-inarks (m), for by these means the evidence of their being copyhold will be destroyed (n); and where a copyholder inclosed leaving certain gaps at certain distances, held, that notwithstanding the gaps, this was an inclosure against the custom (o); but where an inclosure had been made for twelve or thirteen years, and seen by the steward (the same lord and steward continuing all the time) without any objection being made, it may be presumed by the jury to have been made by licence of the lord, and ejectment cannot be brought against the tenant as a trespasser, without previous notice to throw it up being given to him (p).

880. If a copyholder refuses his rent or services, it is a forfeiture (q); but non-payment of rent at the day is no forfeiture, without a refusal to pay (r); therefore, the lord must come upon the land and demand the rent, and if the tenant, being present, refuse to pay, it is a forfeiture (s); or if he say nothing, it is still a forfeiture (t); and my Lord Coke says, that if he excuses himself for the want of money, and entreats the lord to forbear, this is a forfeiture (u); and if he assigns a day certain, within the manor, for the payment, and he does not pay, this is a forfeiture, for it amounts to an absolute refusal (x); so, the non-payment of a reasonable fine upon demand is a forfeiture (y); sed secus, if it be unreasonable, or if it is doubtful whether it be reasonable, or whether it be due or not, or whether there have been an express refusal, or if there was, whether the fine have been paid within a limited time (z); but it lies on the copyholder to shew that it is unreasonable (a).

Suit of court.

881. So, if a copyholder, being duly summoned, refuses to appear at the court of the lord, it is a forfeiture (b).

Summons,
what to be.

By the opinions of some, a general warrant within the parish was deemed sufficient, but the better opinion is, that there must be a particular summons made to the person, to make a forfeiture (c); so, if he come not to be admitted on due proclamation and pay his fine (d); so, if a copyholder refuses to be sworn upon the homage in a court-baron (e), or when sworn refuses to present according to his oath (e); so, if a copyholder forges a customary (f), provided he makes use of it (f); so, if he disclaims being tenant to the lord (g); sed secus, if he comes into court and renounces his copy (h).

so, the refusal must be wilful and absolute, therefore, if the lord come to the copyholder and require him to do his services, and the copyholder answer, if they are due, he will do them, but it shall be tried at law first whether they are due, this is no forfeiture, being no wilful refusal (k); so, if the copyholder says, "If it be a court, I appear; if not, I do not appear;" this is no refusal or forfeiture (l); but if there be no controversy about the legality of the court, and this is only used as a shift, then it seems to be a forfeiture (m).

TENURES.

2. Who subject to Forfeiture.

882. A forfeiture can only arise by the act of the tenant; if, therefore, a disseisor commit waste, it is no forfeiture (n); so, if a surrenderee commits felony before admittance (o); so, in the case of a cestui que trust (p); so, if a guardian commit waste, it shall be no forfeiture of the copyhold, but he shall lose his wardship (q); so, if a stranger commit waste, the copyholder shall not forfeit his land, for things in law, as forfeitures, conditions, and the like, are to be taken strictly (r); so, if there be tenant for life, remainder in fee of a copyhold, and the tenant for life commits a forfeiture, this shall not bind the remainder-man (s); but, although this shall not affect the remainder-man, yet he shall not enter, but the lord shall hold it during the life of the person committing the forfeiture (t); so, if a lessee, a copyholder tenant in tail, commit a forfeiture, his issue is bound by it (u); so, the forfeiture of one joint-tenant will not affect the part of the other (u); so, if a lessee by licence make a feoffment, or cut down timber, or do any act which would be a forfeiture if done by the copyholder, this will forfeit only the estate of the lessee, and not the estate of the copyholder (x).

If done by persons under disabilities.

883. As a rule, neither a feme covert of herself without the assent of her husband, nor an infant under the age of fourteen, (being till then in ward), nor any person non sane memoria, nor any idiot or lunatic, can forfeit a copyhold. By the 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 65, s. 9, it is provided, that no forfeiture shall be incurred by infants, femes covert, or lunatics, for refusing to be admitted, or to pay the lord's fine; and under the 9 G. 1, c. 29, which is repealed by the 11 G. 4, it was held that if one of several co-heirs of a copyholder were a feme covert at the time of the ancestor's death, and the lord seized the whole estate without first appointing an attorney, it was irregular and void (y).

Exceptions.

Feme covert.

To the above general rule there are several exceptions. If a feme covert be attainted of treason or felony, with the consent of the husband, her copyhold will be forfeited (z); so, if she commits waste with the like consent, it will be a forfeiture (a); but a lease by the husband for more years than is warranted by the custom will be a forfeiture only for the life of the husband (b); but denying to pay the rent or to do suit at court are present forfeitures, which shall bind the wife (b); so, doing waste by the husband is a forfeiture, which shall bind the wife (b).

Infant.

884. An infant above the age of fourteen committing treason, felony, or voluntary waste, or other act to the disherison of the lord, or wilfully refusing his services, shall forfeit his copyhold (c); but for permissive waste, or replevying against the lord, or for leasing contrary to the custom, or the like, he shall not be liable to forfeiture (d); but if the infant accepts rent after full age, and so confirms a lease, the forfeiture will bind him (d); but it appears very doubtful whether the lord would be justified in entering as for a forfeiture in such a case (e).

TENURES.

3. Who may take Advantage of a Forfeiture.

885. A forfeiture can only be taken advantage of by him who is lord at the time of the forfeiture; except in those cases where the act of forfeiture destroys the estate, as by fine or feoffment (f); but a distinction has been taken between things which are forfeitures at the election of the lord, as leasing without licence, waste, and the like, of which the lord only can take advantage, and those which go to the disherison of the lord by destroying his estate, as by feoffment, and formerly a fine (f); therefore, if a copyholder commit a forfeiture, and the lord die before entry or seizure for the forfeiture, he in reversion or remainder shall not take advantage of the forfeiture committed before his time (g); but if the copyholder of a manor belonging to a bishopric during a vacancy commit a forfeiture by cutting timber, the succeeding bishop may take advantage of it (h); but see further as to seizure quousque, post, § 902; so, a lessee for years of a manor shall take advantage of a forfeiture committed by a copyholder, for he is dominus pro tempore (i); so, if the lord grant to a stranger the freehold of a copyhold in fee, though by this the tenement is divided from the manor, and not demisable by copy again, yet the grantee of the freehold shall take advantage of a forfeiture committed afterwards by the copy-

the queen.

886. Even in the case of forfeiture for treason, the forfeiture accrues to the lord, and not to the queen, except by the express words of an Act of Parliament (n); but where a copyholder commits treason, and the lord aliens the manor, and afterwards the copyholder is attainted by Act of Parliament, it is not settled whether the alienee shall take advantage of the forfeiture (n).

Forfeiture to coparceners.

In one case where a copyhold manor descended on two coparceners, and copyholder committed waste, or made a lease, which were forfeitures, and after one of the sisters died, held, that the surviving coparcener should not take advantage of the forfeiture, for the election to take advantage of the forfeiture must be made by them both, which could not be after the death of one of them (o).

4. Extent of the Forfeiture.

When holden
by one tenure,
or otherwise.

887. Where a copyhold is holden by one tenure, it is said that forfeiture of a part is a forfeiture of the whole (p); sed secus, if a copyholder be seised of several copies, as Blackacre by the rent of 3*d.*, and of Whiteacre by the rent of 4*d.*, and of Greenacre by the rent of 6*d.*, and one of the acres is

As to dispensing with a forfeiture, and how a forfeiture is to be taken advantage of, see infra, §§ 888, 889 et seq.

5. Dispensing with a Forfeiture.

888. Forfeitures being deemed odious in the law, the Courts have always inclined to construe every act of the lord as indicating an intention of dispensing with or waiving the forfeiture; therefore, if the tenant appear not in court, and the lord, after personal warning, amerce him, this is a dispensation of the forfeiture (t); so, although it is not estreated or levied (u); so, the acceptance of rent after a lease made is a dispensation (x); so, the accepting of any services (y); so, the re-admission of the copyholder who has committed the forfeiture (z); so, by the admittance of the heir (a); and so, even by the presentment of the death of the party committing the forfeiture, *Tarrant v. admission of the copyholder or his heir, but any recognition on the part of the lord, would preclude him from taking advantage of a forfeiture (c);" so, if copyholder lets by indenture, which is forfeiture, and after surrenders to the use of J. S., and he is admitted, the lord after shall not take advantage of the forfeiture (d); and in Penn v. Merivall (e), it was held that a grant of the freehold before entry for a forfeiture by leasing without licence was an affirmation of the lease.

So, if the lord do not enter for a forfeiture by reason of waste, and the tenant repairs, held, that the forfeiture was purged (f); so, although trees that were cut down for repairs were not used until five years after (f); so, it is said, that if a copyholder who comes to his estate tortiously commit a forfeiture, and then he that hath right release to him, that is a dispensation of the forfeiture, sed quare (g).

By what lord.

889. So, an act by a lord pro tempore, which amounts to a dispensation, will bind those entitled to the manor in remainder or reversion, but not so as to give effect to a grant of a common-law interest (h); but a lord by wrong, as by disseisin, cannot do any act of dispensation to bind the rightful lord (h).

What not a dispensation.

890. So, the forfeiture must be known to the lord, otherwise any act by him amounting to a dispensation will not be deemed as such, Co. Cop., s. 61, tr. 140; but see *Mantle v. 6. How Forfeiture may be taken Advantage of:

§91. In order to remove the estate out of the copyholder and vest it in the lord, the lands forfeited must be seized by the lord or his steward, either by the entry of himself or his steward (o), so as he makes the entry within twenty years after the commission of the forfeiture (p); or by the exercise of some act of ownership tantamount to such seizure, as the granting them to another for years, or the like (q).

Forfeiture may be taken advantage of by entry.

§92. Seizure by entry may be either immediately upon the commission of the act of forfeiture, or it may be made after presentment by the homage. When the act of forfeiture is of a public nature, as attainder for treason or felony, which is notorious from the publicity of conviction and the attainder on record, or refusing in open court to do suit or service, &c., or other matter which must necessarily be within the lord's knowledge, and is not of a dubious character, so as to admit of a double construction, no presentment will be necessary, because the reason of the presentment is to give the lord notice of the forfeiture (r).

Necessary.

893. But where the act of forfeiture is of such a nature that the lord cannot be supposed to have knowledge of it without express notice being given him, or if it be of such a nature that either the fact of commission or the actual nature of the offence be questionable, the lord cannot, as it should seem, make a seizure until presentment of the cause of forfeiture be made by the homage (s); so, says my Lord Coke, "The offences and causes of forfeiture of which by common presumption the lord cannot of himself have notice, are felony or treason, outlawry or excommunication, going about in any other court to entitle any other lord to the copyhold, and alienation by bargain and sale inrolled, or by feoffment with livery, and these and the like ought to be presented (t);" but this point is not settled. It is said by a writer of authority, "The reason given by Coke is of no cogency, that because the lord cannot by intendment have notice of them himself, therefore he shall take no advantage of them without presentment; for if he can take notice of them, why should he not, since presentment is not that which gives title, but only lets him know what he hath title to. But, however, it is safe to get such things presented, and if there be a custom for it, it must be pursued (u);" see also 1 Watk. Cop. 346, and the authorities above cited, (ante, § 892), where presentment was held not be necessary. § 894. Another mode by which the copyhold interest may be destroyed or annihilated is by enfranchisement, which, as the term imports, is an emancipation of the land from its base tenure, or converting the same from a copyhold into a freehold tenure. There is a clear distinction between enfranchisement and extinguishment, for enfranchisement destroys the tenure, so that the lands become absolutely free, and extinguishment destroys only the estate of the copyholder, which may be revived in the same or another person by a new grant.

Definition of enfranchisement.

Distinction between enfranchisement and extinguishment.

895. An enfranchisement is effected by a common-law conveyance of the fee simple of the particular tenement, by the lord of the manor to the copyholder, for it is by the union of the freehold and copyhold interest, that the base or less worthy tenure becomes lost in the more worthy (z); therefore, it is immaterial whether it be immediately from the lord, or first to a stranger, and such stranger convey to the copyholder, for in either case it will be an enfranchisement on the union of the tenures (z); so, a person who has been admitted and recognized as the lord's tenant, although in strictness he should have an equitable interest only, is capable of receiving a grant of the freehold, for giving effect to a contract of enfranchisement, and the heir may accept an enfranchisement before admission (a); but it seems that if a copyholder be enfeoffed by the lord to the use of others, the copyhold interest will still remain under the Stat. of Uses, (27 H. 8, c. 10, s. 3(b)).

By conveyance of the fee simple.

896. In order to make an enfranchisement absolute and entire, the fee simple of the freehold must be conveyed, for if a less estate than the fee be conveyed, the union, though complete for the time, can last no longer than during the continuance of the interest conveyed, after which the land may again be granted to be holden by copy; therefore, where the husband of a lady of the manor let a copyhold parcel of the manor for years by indenture, held, that this did not destroy the custom of the manor, but that the wife after his death might demise it again by copy (c); this, therefore, will operate only as a temporary suspension of the copyhold interest, and not as an enfranchisement (v). But a copyholder having but a partial interest, as an estate for life, &c., his taking such a conveyance of the fee will not prevent the enfranchisement from being complete; because, although the copyhold interest as to him can be for no longer time than he has therein, yet the grant of the freehold in the fee simple by the lord renders the land for ever incapable of being holden of him by copy, since his whole estate is gone by the grant in fee simple, and such a conveyance operates as a total extinction of the demisable quality of the land; the enfranchisement, however, in this case is not for the benefit of the party himself only, but of all those who would have been entitled to the copyhold, after the determination of the particular estate, and will not pass a fee simple to the particular tenant, whose heir-at-law will, therefore, be compellable to execute a conveyance to the remainder-man, on his paying a proportionate part of the consideration, if any, paid for the enfranchisement (d).

By the Land Tax Redemption Act, (42 G. 3, c. 116), persons having a particular interest only are empowered to enfranchise copyholds, and a conveyance by them made to operate as a complete enfranchisement. There is a like provision in the Church Building Act, (58 G. 3, c. 45); and by the 10 G. 4, c. 50, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are empowered to enfranchise copyhold land held of the Crown, and the deeds of enfranchisement are to be enrolled.

897. An enfranchisement may likewise be effected by the lord's releasing to the copyholder the manorial rights, for by this the lands are severed from the manor, and the tenure between the lord and his tenant dissolved, and he must thenceforth hold of the lord above by the same services as the releasor held before (e). The lands, therefore, being thus by enfranchisement severed from the manor, it follows that all customs which attached upon them, whilst holden of the manor, as a particular mode of descent or the like, are lost, and they acquire all the properties and qualities of freehold tenures; and so also will all rights and privileges annexed to the copyholder's estate, as right of common or the like, be of course extinguished as soon as the copyhold to which they were annexed is gone; if, therefore, it be intended that these rights should be preserved, an express grant of them to the grantee of the land must be inserted in the deed of enfranchisement (f), see further, infra, § 899.

Effect of inclosure.

898. When an allotment is made to a copyholder, of waste or other freehold land, under an Act of Parliament, not containing an express provision that the allotted land shall be held by the same tenure as the estate in respect whereof the allotment is made, no change of tenure will take place in the land so allotted; therefore, where allotments were made and awarded to a copyholder, in respect of several customary estates of which he was seised in fee according to the custom of the manor, according to an agreement between the lord of the manor and the commoners, which was confirmed by an inclosure act, held, that the allotments so made were freehold, not customary estate, and therefore were not within the custom of the manor, that customary estates were not devisable by will, Lowes v. Davidson (g); and it was in this case assumed as incontrovertible, that a copyhold could not be created at this day except by Act of Parliament, or by custom to warrant the granting the waste as copyhold; and as the act did not direct the allottees to take their allotments as copyholders, they took their allotments as freehold estates of inheritance, it not being competent to the parties, by any agreement among themselves, to constitute an estate of a customary nature in these allotments (h).

Effect of enfranchisement.
To extinguish common.

899. One consequence of enfranchisement is, that where a copyholder has common in the wastes within the manor that belongs to his estate, if the estate be enfranchised, the common is extinct (i), unless it be specially preserved to the copyholder in terms equivalent to a re-grant of common (k); and the grant of "all appurtenances" to the copyhold tenement has been held not sufficient to preserve the common;

but though this right is destroyed at law by enfranchisement, it will subsist in equity (l); so, if a man has common in the wastes of the lord out of the manor, he has the same as belonging to his land; and if he enfranchise the copyhold estate, still his common remains (m); so, if a copyholder has immemorially enjoyed a right of way over another's copyhold, and he become the purchaser of the freehold of his own copyhold, yet the way remains (n), for, as between the copyholder and a stranger, it is the tenure only that is altered by the enfranchisement (o).

TENURES.

900. If a copyhold estate be enfranchised by a tenant in tail, the issue in tail will be barred (p). To bar entails.

The conveyance by way of enfranchisement should always be taken in the name of the copyholder, and not in the name of a trustee, for in this latter case the copyhold interest would still remain, so that the wife of the copyholder, if dowable by the custom, would still remain so (q), and the heir is entitled to recover in ejectment against the purchaser of the freehold interest (r).

When made to a trustee.

Enfranchisement only alters the manner of the tenure; therefore, where the lord is bound to repair a way ratione tenuræ, the ancient freehold and copyhold tenants are not liable to contribute, for nothing is part of the manor but demesnes and services, and not the lands of the tenants; and though the copyholds are afterwards enfranchised, yet they are not chargeable, because it only alters the manner of the tenure (s).

Injuries affecting lord or tenant.

§ 901. The injuries relating to copyholds are those which affect either the lord or the tenant. Of the former kind are, subtraction of services, committing waste, and others which cause a forfeiture, see ante, § 872, also post, INJURIES TO THINGS REAL. Those which affect the tenant are ouster, or what is equivalent to it, refusing to admit a tenant, and abridging a tenant of his rights of common.

Remedies for the lord.

902. The remedies for the lord are entry and seizure, ejectment, and case.

Seizure.

Seizure by entry is the remedy in cases of forfeiture, but the lord of a manor may, in some cases, only seize quousque, and not absolutely as for a forfeiture; thus, after three proclamations for the tenant to come in and be admitted, if the tenant fail to attend, the lord may seize quousque; as where the heir was beyond seas at the time of the ancestor's death, held, that the lord had a right to seize in the interim, though he could not seize absolutely as forfeited (t); so, although a feme covert is protected from forfeiture by the statute 11 G. 4 & 1 W. 4, c. 65, (Dig. P. II. tit. COURTS), yet the lord may enter in the meantime; so, where one saying he would come if the lord had a court, otherwise not, held, not to be a forfeiture, but the lord on such refusal might seize quousque (u); and the lord of a manor cannot seize a copyhold estate as forfeited pro defectu tenentis without a custom; therefore, where, on the death of a copyholder of inheritance, the lord, after three proclamations for the heir to come in and be admitted, seized the estate into his hands, and afterwards granted it to another, the Court considered it as an absolute seizure, and consequently irregular, there being no custom to warrant it, and being irregular as an absolute seizure, it could not afterwards be set up as a seizure quousque (v); so, if the lord do not take advantage of the forfeiture within twenty years, his right is said to be barred (v); see further, as to the dispensing with a forfeiture, ante, §§ 888 et seq., and as to the taking advantage of a forfeiture, ante, §§ 892 et seq.

A lord may, however, seize copyhold land quousque by virtue of a right which accrued to the preceding lord, on default of the heirs coming in to be admitted, even although he be the devisee and not the heir of the preceding lord (x); but, to entitle the lord to make such seizure, there must be three proclamations made at three consecutive courts, Bover v. Trueman (y); and in this case it was said, "The seizure is rather in the nature of a process at the instance of the lord, by way of cape or distringas, to compel an appearance by the heir, than a forfeiture (z)." TENTHED.

this case it was said, that the proclamations at the lord's court are substituted for the notice which ought to be given to the heir if known that the tenancy is vacant. The proceeding bears some analogy to proceedings in outlawry to compel a party to appear in court to answer the complaint of another (a).

Other remedies.

903. For denying of services the lord may either seize or distrain, as in the case of rents, fines, reliefs, or heriots, see ante, §§ 802, 815; or for non-attendance at court may amerce,

In what courts.

see ante, § 888. So, the lord of the manor may plead or be impleaded, or avow for the rent or services of his copyhold tenant in any court of equity, for he hath an estate at common law in the rent, and it is due to him on the same grounds in law as the rents of freehold lands, for otherwise he would be both judge and party (b), see further, as to relief in equity, infra, § 913.

Remedies for the tenant.

904. A copyholder may have either an action of ejectment, of trespass, or on the case, either against a stranger or against the lord, according to the circumstances, and also in some cases a mandamus, and may also in some instances have relief in equity, see infra, § 913.

Ejectment.

905. It has long been settled, that a copyholder may try his title in an action of ejectment, and accordingly the lessee of a copyhold for one year may maintain ejectment, inasmuch as his term is warranted by law, and it is a speedy course to recover the possession of land against a stranger (c);

and as a copyholder cannot demise beyond a year without a licence, unless by special custom, it has been thought that he ought in such case to allege the custom, or shew the licence (d); it has, however, been held, that if a copyholder make a lease, even though not warranted by the custom, yet it shall be good so as to maintain an ejectment against a stranger, for as between the lessor and the lessee, and all others, except the lord of the manor, such a lease is good, Downingham's case (e); see also S. Evans* (o), held, that in an ejectment by the lessee of the copyholder, it is sufficient that the count be general, without any mention of the licence; and on the other hand, in Anderson and Heywood's case (p), it was holden, that a copyholder of inheritance of a manor in the hands of the king, and who was ousted of his copyhold, had not gained any estate, so as he might make a lease for years, upon which to maintain an ejectment, but that he had a possession only against all strangers, and see Nelson v. Kenington (q); it is, however, settled, that no ejectment can be maintained by a copyholder, except under a lease at common law (r); see further, as to evidence and other matters in ejectment, post, under the head of INJURIES TO THINGS REAL AND THEIR REMEDIES.

TENURES.

Trespass.

906. So, a copyholder shall have trespass by the common law, for a trespass done upon his copyhold (s); so, he shall have it against his lord if he enters upon him without cause (t), or if he cuts down trees not being timber (u); but see Ashmole, or Ashmole, v. Ranger (x), where the Lords, by a majority of one, reversed the decision of all the judges of the realm.

The customary heir of a copyholder being a complete tenant before admittance, against all persons but the lord may maintain trespass and bring ejectment, without having been admitted (y); so, if the surrenderee be in possession, he may maintain trespass before admittance, that being a possessory action, but before his admittance trespass can only be maintained by the surrenderee (z).

Remedies for commoners.

907. In the case of common, the injuries which affect the copyholder are, disseisin of his common, or disturbance by the lord or other commoners, or by strangers intruding on the waste. As against the lord, even in the case of a total exclusion, the copyholder may abate the nuisance, see ante, § 324; but in other cases he may have an action on the case (z), and as against strangers he may have his remedy by distress, see ante, § 325.

Mandamus.

To compel admittance of customary heir.

908. Copyholders may also have a mandamus in certain cases, as, where the lord refuses to admit a tenant, a mandamus will lie, Roe v. Griffiths (a), where it is said, "The admittance is only form. 'T is a ceremony derived from the origin of copyholds; but the lord's act is mere form, he is a mere instrument, and compellable to admit according to the surrender (b);" and although it was at one time doubted whether this writ would lie to compel the admittance of a party claiming by descent, because he has a complete title against all the world except the lord (c), yet it was said in R. v. Cogan (d), that the courts had for many years been in the habit of granting such writs, and their power of so doing could not be doubted; see also Conolly v. Vernon (e), R. v. Stafford (Marquess) (f), R. v. Water Eaton (g), R. v. Willes (h), R. v. Brewers' Company (i), R. v. Bensall (Lords, &c.) (k), R. v. Wilson (Lord, &c.) (l).

909. So, a mandamus will be granted in other matters affecting customary estates, as for the purpose of compelling the lord of a manor, or his steward, to hold a court, and the homage to present certain conveyances of burgage tenements, entitling the purchasers to be sworn in burgesses of the corporation, and to vote for members of Parliament (m).

So, to compel the acceptance of a surrender, and to admit the surrenderee, R. v. Boughey (Lord, &c.) (n), where the return stated a custom that if any person, not being before a customary tenant or not dwelling within the manor, should take any estate as a purchaser, by surrender or otherwise, of any customary tenant within the manor, he should pay an arbitrary fine, but that persons being customary tenants paid another and smaller fine, and it further stated, that B. having purchased the equity of redemption of a customary estate of considerable value, afterwards and before he was admitted thereto purchased the land in question, being a small customary estate, in order to be admitted to that first, and alleged this to be

To inspect court rolls.

910. So, the lord is compellable by this writ to permit the court rolls to be inspected by any person claiming an interest under them; and it was granted to one who had a prima facie title to certain copyhold lands (p); and it will be granted as of course on the application of a tenant (q); and it is not necessary that there should be any suit depending (r); but, in R. v. Allgood (s), the Court held, that a freehold tenant had no right to inspect the court rolls unless there were some cause depending in which his title might be involved.

To enrol surrender.

So, a mandamus might lie against the lord, or his steward, to compel the enrolment of a surrender, and it was refused in one case only because the surrender had not been prepared by the steward or his deputy (t).

Actions by copyholder, in what courts.

911. A copyholder must, in every action real, implead and be impleaded in respect of his copyhold land in the court of the manor of which it is holden, for he cannot implead or be impleaded in such case by the queen's writ (u); and therefore, before the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, abolishing most real actions, or plaints in the nature thereof, (see Dig. (v); and if an erroneous judgment were given, he should not have a writ of false judgment in respect of the baseness of his estate, but he must have sued to the lord by petition (x); but a copyholder might have the action of ejectment, which is now the only proper action retained for trying titles to land, see ante, § 905.

TENURES.

912. Actions merely personal, the copyholder may sue at common law (y); so, a copyholder may have case against the lord, or a stranger, for an injury done to the common belonging to his copyhold (z); but if lessee for years of a copyholder cuts down the trees, the copyholder shall sue in the lord's court to punish this offence (z); so, if a copyholder surrenders to the use of B., upon trust that he shall hold the land until he hath levied certain money, and that after he shall surrender to the use of C., the money is levied, and B. is required to make a surrender to the use of C., and refuses, upon C. exhibiting his bill to the lord of the manor against B., if B. persists in his refusal, the lord may seize and admit C. to the copyhold, for in such case he is chancellor in his own court (a), and he may do right according to conscience (b); so, if a surrender be made to the use of another, without expressing what estate he shall have, a custom, that the lord may grant it in fee to him for whose use the surrender was made, is good (c).

Personal actions.

lord to admit a person who does not shew a colourable title, and that there is a reasonable prospect of succeeding at law (e).

To produce the court rolls.

914. So, a court of equity will also make an order on the lord or steward to produce the court rolls for the inspection of any one claiming an interest under them (f); and although a Court of law, in a question between the lords of different manors, will not enforce an inspection of the court rolls, yet a Court of equity will do so on a bill for a discovery (g); but the Court refused to interfere upon a petition to have court rolls delivered by a steward appointed by trustees to a steward appointed by a testamentary guardian, there being no suggestion of improper conduct, or advantage from the change (h).

To discover boundaries.

915. So, a Court of equity will entertain a bill by the lord of a manor to discover the boundaries and description of lands, and for a commission to issue, if necessary, to distinguish freeholds from copyholds, where they are intermixed (i); but this will be done only under special circumstances, Bouverie v. Prentice (k); see also Rouse v. Barker (l), Wake v. Conyers (m), Winterton v. Lord Egremont (n), Spier v. Crawler (o), from which it appears that equity interferes to settle boundaries only when the soil itself has been in question, or to prevent a multiplicity of actions (p).

916. So, a Court of equity will, under special circumstances, grant relief against an act that is a forfeiture, as where waste has been inadvertently done (q), or done by a stranger (r); so, in cases of permissive waste, equity will generally give relief (s); so, it has relieved against a forfeiture, when timber on one copyhold has been cut down to be employed for the repair of another (t); and in the case of cutting timber, it has directed an issue to try quo animo it was cut (u); but it will not relieve against wilful waste, nor unless a compensation can be made to the lord (x); so, where copyholders are allowed by the custom to cut down, it will grant an injunction to restrain waste in favour of the remainder-man, the same as in cases of freehold (y); so, a customary heir of a copyholder taking by way of resulting trust until the happening of a contingency has been restrained from committing waste (z); and although in Dench v. Bampton (a), the Court refused to interpose to prevent waste, leaving the lord to his remedy for the forfeiture, and in a previous case it had been held, that a bill for discovery of waste was demurrable to (b), yet, in *Richards v. TENURES. not at the will of the lord, according to the custom in which case the rolls and copies ought to be made^(s), and these are what my Lord Coke calls 'copyholds of frank tenure(t),' " by which name they were distinguished from common copyholds, and, in reality, were distinguished by this property, that they were not tenants at will of the lord. Such customary freeholds still retain several of the badges of their original base tenure. Thus it was, that though their services were certain, and so far free, yet they were villein services, and not free services. So, their mode of alienating or transferring their land was, not by the usual conveyances by deed at common law, but by surrender into the hands of the lord; and so, in like manner, they could not either sue or be sued in the queen's court, but only in the court-baron of the lord. So, although the lands were not held at the will of the lord, and therefore the tenant could not ever have been ousted at the lord's pleasure, yet still the lands were liable to forfeiture, and the tenant might be ousted by his own default, for the non-payment or non-performance of the rents and services, which no free tenant could be by the common law. So, likewise, as a further mark of distinction by which these tenants may be known as copyholders, and not freeholders, they were not members of the county court, where all elections by freeholders are directed to be made, and were not contributory to the wages of the knights of the shire, which were formerly raised by their constituents to defray their expenses in Parliament^(u); consequently, before the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 45, they had no vote for the election of members of Parliament.

Such copy-holders have what kind of freehold.

921. But although these tenants have to some purposes a freehold, yet this is not so much a freehold of tenure as a freehold of estate; and the better opinion is, that the freehold of such copyhold lands is in the lord, and not in the tenant, even although they pass, as is frequently the case, by deed of grant, or bargain and sale and admittance, instead of surrender and admittance (x); but a distinction has been taken between customary estates held of the manor, in which case the freehold is in the tenant, or whether it be within and parcel of the manor, where the freehold is in the lord (y).

TENURES.

922. In Hussey v. Grills (z) it was held, that, where there is no custom to surrender to the use of a will, a customary freehold can only pass by a will attested, by the Statute of Frauds, or now according to the 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 26, see Dig. P. III. tit. WILLS. And so, in Willan v. Lancaster (a), held, that the equitable interest of a customary freehold would not pass by a will not executed according to that statute, although common copyholds were held not to be within that statute; and it has been held, that a customary freehold, whether strictly copyhold or not to all purposes, would pass under the description of "copyhold" in a will, the intention to pass it under that description being apparent (b). So, it has been holden that customary or tenant-right estates, held of the lord by certain rents and services, according to the custom of the manor, were not within the Statutes of Partition, see Dig. P. III. tit. PARTITION; and consequently, where it appeared upon the face of the plea that the land was not properly freehold, the plaintiff was nonsuited (c). So, as customary freeholds are regulated by custom in the same manner as common copyholds, held, that a custom in a manor, that the grantee of a customary estate, which will pass either by surrender or deed and admittance, must be admitted during the life of grantor, is good (d).

Mode of pleading customary freehold.

923. In one respect, namely, as to the mode of pleading, there is a difference between common copyholds and customary freeholds, for a copyholder must not omit the words ad voluntatem domini (e); and where these words are omitted, it will be intended to be customary freehold (e). See also Gale v. Noble (f), Hill v. Bolton (g), Follett v. Troake (h); in which latter case it was held that a customary freeholder may prescribe in a que estate, which a common copyholder cannot do. Where, in a "manor, the copies of admissions were anciently to hold of the lord, according to the custom of husbandry of the said manor," but other copies were to hold "at the will of the lord," and all modern copies were so, held, that this land was copyhold, and not customary freehold (i). § 924. This tenure may be considered, as to what relates to its nature; to the privileges enjoyed by tenants in ancient demesne; how ancient demesne may become frank-fee; court of ancient demesne. As to incidents of the estate in ancient demesne, see post, CUSTOMARY ESTATES.

1. Nature of Ancient Demesne.

Tenure in ancient demesne, at least the free sort of it, is a higher kind of customary freehold, and it is confined to such lands as were held in socage of manor belonging to the Crown, in the reign of Edward the Confessor and William the Conqueror, and is, therefore, sometimes designated “socage in ancient tenure(k).” All such lands were set down in a book called Domesday or Doomsday Book; namely, those which were in the possession of Edward the Confessor, under the title of Terræ Regis Edwardi, and those in the possession of William the Conqueror, under that of Terræ Regis only; and therefore, whether ancient demesne or not is to be tried by that book; but the writ does not require the production of the book itself, only a certificate of the fact from the treasurer and chamberlain of the Exchequer (l); and unless the manor is mentioned therein as Terræ Regis or Terræ Regis Edwardi, it will not be deemed ancient demesne, although the book should furnish evidence of a grant thereof from the Crown (m); but this book will not shew whether the lands themselves are ancient demesne or not, but only whether the manor be so or not (n); for an acre of land may be ancient demesne, though the manor of which it is parcel is not so (o); and if the question be, whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demesne, this shall be tried per pais (p).

Different kinds of tenants.

925. Tenants of these lands under the Crown were not all of the same order or degree. Some of them continued for a long time pure villeins dependent on the will of the lord, and those who succeeded them in their tenure differed but in some few points. They could not maintain a writ of right close (since abolished by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 36, see Dig. P. III. tit. LIMITATIONS) nor a monstraverunt, but were obliged to sue by plaint in the lord's court. Others were as good as enfranchised by the royal favour, and hold their lands freely by the grant of the king, being only bound in respect of their lands to perform the better sort of services, and those determinate and certain, as to plough the king's land for so many days, or to supply his court with a certain quantity of provisions, and other stated services, which have been changed into pecuniary rents. The estates of these tenants pass by surrender or deed of grant or bargain and sale (q).

TENURES.

2. Privileges of the Tenure in Ancient Demesne.

926. Lord Coke (r) enumerates six privileges enjoyed by tenants in ancient demesne; namely, first, not to be impleaded out of the manor; secondly, to be exempt from juries; thirdly, to be exempt from tolls, &c.; fourthly, to be free of taxes and talliages by Parliament; fifthly, not to be liable to contribute to the expenses of knights of the shire; sixthly, in case of being distrained, to join in a monstraverunt.

Enumeration of privileges belonging to this tenure.

In the first place, tenants in ancient demesne were not to be impleaded for any of their lands, or compelled to appear in any court out of the manor, but to have justice administered to them at their own doors, in a particular court called the court of ancient demesne, by a peculiar process denominated a petit writ of right close, (now abolished by the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, s. 36, see Dig. P. III. tit. LIMITATIONS), directed to the bailiff of the queen's manors, or to the lord of the manor, if it be in the hands of a subject (r).

Not to be impleaded out of the manor.

But it must appear that the land is ancient demesne, for if a fine levied in C. P. were still in force, the lands were frank-fee until reversed, and the tenant might, therefore, be impleaded at common law; but affidavit that the lands are reputed ancient demesne is sufficient (s); so, the land must not only be holden of the manor, being ancient demesne, but it must appear that the lessor of the plaintiff has a freehold, for lessee of a term cannot sue there (t); so, if the manor and demesnes of the manor are in dispute, they must be impleaded at common law, and not in the lord's court, otherwise the lord would be judge in his own cause (x).

Not to be impannelled on a jury.

927. So, tenants in ancient demesne cannot be impannelled on any jury at Westminster, or elsewhere, in any court, upon any inquest or trial of any cause (y); and they may have a writ de non ponendis et juratis, against the sheriff or any one who has return of writs, and if, after all, the sheriff make a return, they may have an attachment against him (z); but ancient demesne is no exemption from serving the office of constable (a).

To be exempt from tolls.

928. So, tenants in ancient demesne are exempt from all manner of tolls in fairs and markets for all things concerning husbandry and substance (b); but this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and gets his living by buying and selling, but it is annexed to the person in respect of the land, and to those things which grow and are the produce of the lands (c); and this privilege extends as well to tenants who hold of a subject as of the queen (d); and so it extends to tenants in ancient demesne, whether they hold in fee, for life, or years, or at will (e); so, to the lord himself (f).

To be free of taxes.

929. Again, tenants in ancient demesne are to be free of taxes and talliaiges by Parliaments, unless they be specially named (g), and regularly, all general acts of Parliament extend to ancient demesne lands (h). So, they were not to contribute to the expenses of knights of Parliament (h); but before the 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 45, they, in common with ordinary copyholders, did not enjoy the elective franchise (i).

930. Lastly, if tenants in ancient demesne be severally distrained for other services, than they are obliged to by the custom of the manor, they may have a writ of monstraverunt directed to the lord, commanding him not to distrain for other services; and if he will still distrain, &c., then by a writ directed to the sheriff he may command him, not to demand or distrain for other services; and if he still persists, then he may raise the posse comitatus, or command the neighbours to rescue and destroy the distress, but the usual course is, that if after the writ to the sheriff, the lord will distrain, then attachment lies against him, returnable in one of the courts at Westminster, to answer the contempt (k); so, they all, for the saving of charges, may join in this writ, albeit they be several tenants (l); so, this writ may be sued generally, without shewing the names of the tenants (m); but in an attachment against the lord, the tenants suing it must be named, and those only who are specially named in the writ of attachment shall recover special damages (n).

May have a writ of monstraverunt.

If frank-tenants, and those by base tenure, join in a monstraverunt, the writ shall abate only as to the latter; so, the lord shall not be put to answer until the Court be certified by the treasurer and chamberlain of the Exchequer, that the manor is ancient demesne (o).

TENURES.

If the lord in ancient demesne proceed after the plea removed by recordari, a certiorari goes to the C. P., to certify the tenor of the record removed into the Chancery, and upon that an attachment lies against the lord to answer to the queen and the party in C. P. (y); so, if the lord proceed after a supersedeas (z).

END OF VOL. I.

4. Court of Ancient Demesne.

933. The court of ancient demesne is a court-baron, and Not a court of record not a court of record; in respect to which it is necessary to consider the constitution of the court; the jurisdiction of the court, and proceedings therein; how the lord shall be compelled to do right; and when and how the plea shall be removed.

a. Constitution of the Court.

934. Though the writ of right close, before its abolition, Suitors the judges.
(see ante, § 926), were directed to the lord or bailiffs, yet the suitors are the judges (c); therefore, pleading a suit there coram A. et B. ballivis, et C. et D. sectatoribus, is bad (d), but coram A. et B. ballivis et sectatoribus is well, because they shall be intended to be bailiffs and suitors also (d). So, coram seneschallo, sectatoribus, et domesmen (e); so, the suitors there may act by attorney, although they are the judges (f).

b. Jurisdiction of the Court.

935. A court of ancient demesne held plea by writ of right In cases of ouster.
close, in all cases where a tenant in tail for life, or in dower of tenements in ancient demesne, was ousted and disseised; and the party ousted, or his heir, might have such writ (g); and after the delivery of the writ, the demandant should make protestation to sue in form of an assize of mort d'ancestor, &c., all which writs are now abolished. (See ante, § 926). So, the tenant might also have a bill of fresh force in this court, within forty days after disseisin, without any writ sued (h); so, he might have an ejectment (i), which is now
